Nazis Cross Rhine, Great Maginot Battle Rages; British Hurl in Men, Tanks to Slow Rush in West; Roosevelt Promises Reynaud 'Redoubled' Aid

U. S. Is Doing All in Its Power, President Says, Pledges Speed

President Roosevelt last night answered the "final appeal" of French Premier Reynaud for United States help.

Mr. Roosevelt pledged:

"Redoubled" efforts to supply munitions to the hard-pressed Allies.

An increasing flow of American-made planes, artillery and all war materiel as long as the French continue to fight "in defense of their liberty."

United States refusal to 'recognize "as valid any attempts to infringe by force the independence and territorial integrity of France."

And Mr. Roosevelt added:

"I know that you will understand that these statements carry with them no implication of military commitments. Only the Congress can make such commitments."

Meant to Hearten French

It was only a reiteration of the President's previous pledge to send "all possible aid" to the Allies. Washington observers did not read into it any new plans to increase that aid immediately. It was pointed out that the production of war materials now has been stepped up to the maximum to meet Allied orders.

However, the message was interpreted here as another move to hearten the French at a time when their government was reported discussing desperate measures.

The message was cabled shortly after the President had conferred for more than an hour with Count Rene de Saint-Quetin, French Ambassador, and Lord Lothian, British Ambassador.

The purpose of this conference, which was at the request of the Allied envoys, was not announced. Lord Lothian merely said that the meeting with the President had "cleared up some things in our mind."

Topic Not Disclosed

Neither the envoy nor the White House gave a hint of what "things" there were that needed clearing.

The President's message, a personal one to Premier Reynaud, was in reply to one which the French government chief had announced Thursday night, in a radio broadcast, he was making to the United States as a "final appeal."

A previous appeal, on June 10, coincided with Mr. Roosevelt's Charlottesville address, in which he had pledged "all possible aid" and in which he referred to Italy (without mentioning it by name) as "the hand that held the dagger struck in the back of a neighbor."

Text of the President's cable to the French Premier yesterday follows:

"I am sending you this reply to your message of yesterday which I am sure you will realize has received the most earnest, as well as the most friendly, study on our part.

"First of all, let me reiterate the ever-increasing admiration with which the American people and their Government are viewing the resplendent courage with which the French armies are resisting the invaders on French soil.

"I wish also to reiterate in the most emphatic terms that, making every possible effort under present

Main Blast Cuts Third of D.C. Water Supply; Serious Shortage Affects Many Hospitals

1,000,000 Gallons Escape at Foxhall And Canal Roads

With a terrific blast that sounded "like a bomb exploding underground," a major water main burst at Foxhall and Canal roads northwest at 3:15 p. m. yesterday, shutting off about a third of the Capital's water supply and causing an unestimated amount of damage.

Blowing up without warning, the broken main sent tons of water rushing over Canal road, isolated at least one residence and brought about serious water shortages in many Washington hospitals.

At 8 p. m. repairs were being rushed on the conduit and service already had been restored to a great part of the area affected by diverting water from the Bryant street pumping station. Parts of Georgetown, however, were still without water at an early hour today.

Switchboards Swamped

Institutions, business houses and residences affected swamped the police and District Building switchboards with telephone calls.

The volume of queries became so thick that the District Building operator had to appeal to radio stations to broadcast details of the break and beg listeners not to telephone the building.

Affected by the main break, which produced a miniature Niagara Falls at an overpass near Canal and Foxhall roads, were those parts of the city served by the First High Reservoir at Reservoir and Foxhall roads.

These sections are bounded, roughly, by M and Q streets, Rock Creek and Thirty-seventh streets in Georgetown; Capitol Hill and the eastward area between G street southeast, F street northeast, Seventeenth street and the Capitol; First street northwest, Florida avenue, I street and Twenty-first street northwest.

It was conservatively estimated that 1,000,000 gallons of water escaped from the cast-iron main which authorities said was installed some 50 years ago.

Operations Postponed

The water cut-off, lasting over three hours, might have had serious results—fire hazards, power shutdowns, hospital emergencies, etc.—but it caused nothing more than

2 Bunders Held For 'Questioning'

Reading, Pa. (Sunday), June 16 (AP).—State Motor Police Sergt. Edward C. Sickel announced early today that two men he said were officials of the German-American Bund have been arrested "for questioning" and are being held on an open charge.

He identified the men as Wilhelm Kunze, 34, of New York, acting national leader of the organization, and Gustav Joseph Elmer, 49, of Hoboken, N. J., bund secretary-treasurer.

Sickel said they were being questioned about papers, literature and credentials found in their possession.

London Reports Fateful Decision, Denies French Intend to Yield

By the Associated Press

London, June 15.—A fateful decision by Allied commanders was reported today by British sources which said the next 24 hours would tell the tale in the fight for France.

There was no hint what that decision was. But Britain summoned a new class of 300,000 to the colors, called for volunteers for the air force, and dipped into her home defense reserve to back exhausted armies in France.

Spokesmen at London declared the British would fight to the last drop of blood. They denied reports that France was driven to the verge of separate peace.

Air Support Granted

Fresh armored divisions, the iron cavalry shock troops of the new B. E. F., smashed at surging German waves "on a front as wide as France" to give the Poilus rest.

They had the support from the air that British Tommies asked for when they returned from the battering at Dunkerque with the cry: "For God's sake, give us planes."

Waves of British bombers, apparently working closely with the ground troops, splattered German spearheads south of the Seine with explosives just ahead of the Allied counterattacks.

British Bomb Ruhr

At the same time other flights of British planes dumped heavy bombs on military targets in Germany's Ruhr Valley and Rhineland, and on troops at Baden. Ammunition at Bergen, Norway, also was bombed.

The Air Ministry acknowledged the loss of six bombers, and the Admiralty reported the sinking of the 4,180-ton anti-aircraft cruiser Calypso, third cruiser lost since the war began.

One officer and 38 seamen from the Calypso are missing. The ship was torpedoed by an Italian submarine in the Mediterranean.

The admiralty also disclosed the sinking of the trawlers Myrtle and Ocean Sunlight. They struck mines in English waters. All aboard the Myrtle are believed lost and eight are missing from the Ocean Sunlight.

The Air Ministry communique said "bombers of the R. A. F. were actively engaged in support of the Allied forces over the fighting zones south of the Seine" and added:

"Others attacked and severely damaged a concentration of enemy aircraft at Merville Airdrome near Neuve Chapelle . . . bombers renewed their attacks in Germany . . .

Poilus Struggle To Save Great Chain of Forts From Isolation

The War Today

SWASTIKAS FLY over Paris and Versailles, but Germany has turned her attention to the Maginot defense system, while to the west depleted French divisions were claimed to be in full retreat.

BRITISH TANKS, taken from the home defense force, were hurled into the Battle of France; British troops took two Italian forts in Libya and British planes bombed Italy's colonies and German railroads.

NAZI SHOCK TROOPS crossed the Rhine to attack the main Maginot Line above Strasbourg; others claimed to have breached it on the Saar; and in the vast defense system's rear still others took historic Verdun and approached Chaumont.

SOVIET RUSSIA sent armored divisions into Lithuania, Germany's northeastern neighbor.

ITALY CLAIMED a torpedo boat sank a French destroyer and Italian troops were again rumored to be launching an attack on France.

TURKEY ANNOUNCED formally she would not enter the war—apparently because of Russia's attitude.

'Suicidal' Task Done

By the Associated Press

Bordeaux, June 15.—Germany's armies threw a battering ram across the Rhine and into Alsace tonight in the face of the guns of the Maginot Line.

Deep behind the Maginot other Nazi columns—more than 100 miles due west of the crossing of the Rhine—plunged over the Seine and touched the heights of Chaumont some 135 miles southeast of German-engulfed Paris.

The French fought back with the fury of men in anguish.

The government met for 3½ hours "somewhere in France." President Lebrun, Premier Reynaud, Generalissimo Weygand, Admiral Jean Darlan, the navy chief, and Gen. Joseph Vuillemin, the air chief, were there.

In Grave Position

In their grave position they presumably dealt with the results of Reynaud's 'final" pleas for American help, for "clouds of airplanes."

(There was no official indication of the nature or result of the cabinet's deliberations.)

The cabinet meets again tomorrow.

The semi-official Havas Agency said there would be no separate French peace with Hitler. Its dispatch was from London.

Official reports, the only ones available, said "a few detachments" of Nazis crossed the Rhine after the most violent of bombardments.

The Maginot Line, however, was not broken at "the point of resistance," tonight's communique insisted.

(A dispatch from Basel, Switzerland, said French efforts to flood

Berlin Sees Victory Too Near to Treat With French Now

By C. Brooks Peters

Berlin, June 15.—The German armed forces continued today to flatten the remaining resistance of seemingly already defeated France.

Early this evening the general headquarters released a barrage of special announcements revealing that the strongest bulwark of the French defense system, the Maginot Line, had been broken through by German troops on a wide front south of Saarbruecken.

Due west, meanwhile, other German divisions were storming the forts defending Verdun. This morning general headquarters revealed that they had captured Forts Vaux and Marre, and had immediately thereafter marched on Verdun—where in 1916 some 350,000 French and 330,000 Germans lost their lives. Following their capture of the line of forts on both sides of the Meuse,

Newsman Tells Of Entering Ghostly Paris

He Can Scarcely Recognize Dead, Deserted Capital

By Louis P. Lochner

Paris, by Courier Plane to Berlin, June 15.—The swastika banners of Nazi Germany, unfurled by the Austrian vanguard which Adolf Hitler significantly sent as the first of his troops to occupy Paris, floated today atop virtually every prominent and historic structure in this German-captured capital of France.

It is recalled that last January 30, in a speech commemorating the seventh anniversary of the Nazi rise to power, the Fuehrer twitted the Premier of France for having expressed "pity" for Hitler's native Austria, and warned:

"Oh, Monsieur Daladier, you're going to get to know my Austrians. You're going to make their acquaintance."

I, an American correspondent, find myself in Paris as the guest of the German army even before the main forces of that army have arrived.

Only the Austrian vanguard is here. Other divisions have passed through the city, hurrying on to battle without pause. The bulk of the army of occupation is not here yet, but is expected to start arriving before this cable is received in America.

That Hitler himself is due here soon is taken for granted.

(The Tribune de Geneve, of Geneva, Switzerland, carried a special Paris dispatch tonight saying that German troops were busy "preparing the Palace of Versailles for

Red Army Enters Lithuania, Buffer State on Nazi Border

By Otto D. Tolischus

Stockholm, June 15.—Acting with a suddenness characteristic of totalitarian states, Soviet Russia again put her steam-roller in motion in the Baltics today and invided Lithuania in force.

According to reports received here the larger part of an armored division, including 200 tanks, crossed the Lithuanian border at 3 o'clock today and occupied Kaunas, Vilna and other points, in addition to those previously garrisoned under the Russian-Lithuanian "mutual assistance" pact of last fall. Lithuanian troops had orders not to resist and retired before the Russian advance.

Tonight Russian tanks stood posted before public buildings in Kaunas and a representative of Moscow's commissariat of foreign affairs and another high Russian official arrived in Kaunas to "negotiate" the formation of a new Lithuanian government agreeable to Russia.

(The Associated Press reported Lithuanian correspondents in Berlin had heard that Lithuanian President Antanas Smetona had fled into Germany. There was no official confirmation.)

The invasion followed a Russian ultimatum delivered at 11 o'clock yesterday, expiring at 10 a. m. today, demanding the right to occupy the most important places in Lithuania with "sufficient forces." And though the Lithuanian government accepted the ultimatum, Moscow declared Lithuania's answer was insufficient, and ordered the troops to march into Lithuania without further formalities.

The invasion constituted the dramatic denoument of the many dubious political moves by Moscow during recent days and weeks. But it is held to be merely the beginning of similar moves against other Baltic countries which have already became mere "garrison" states of Russia under such "mutual assistance" agreements as had been imposed on Lithuania.

The Russian ultimatum accused Lithuania of joining Latvia and Estonia in a secret military alliance directed against the U. S. S. R., and it appeared possible this alleged alliance might be made the basis of complaints against the latter countries. The Latvian News Agency

'Dabbling with Death'

U. S. Being Led Toward War, Col. Lindbergh Warns Nation

By Edward T. Folliard

(Texts of Lindbergh's Address and the President's Letter, Page 8.)

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, in his fourth radio address since the European war began, last night accused the Roosevelt Administration of "dabbling with death" while holding an "empty gun."

"We cannot continue for long to follow the course our Government has taken without becoming involved in war with Germany," the famous flier said.

Senator Key Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, announced through the Democratic National Committee that he would go on the air at 9:45 o'clock tonight to answer Lindbergh.

From Boston it was announced by the Boston Committee to Defend America by aiding the Allies that Col. Henry Breckinridge, former personal counsel to Lindbergh, would answer last night's talk "statement for statement" in a speech before a Boston Common mass meeting today.

Lindbergh referred to such supplies as America has sent to the Allies as "driblets," and said this country has not sufficient supplies to change the trend of the war in Europe.

He said that the United States had been doing to England and France what they had been doing to Abyssinia, to Czecho-Slovakia, to Poland, to Finland and to Norway—encouraging them to hope for help which the country cannot send.

He said that the United States must strengthen its defenses in cooperation with all American countries, and added significantly that "we must insist upon military bases being placed wherever they are needed for our own safety, regardless of who owns the territory involved."

The Lindbergh speech came on a day that saw many other moves to strengthen defenses.

With the Army growing steadily, the War Department is preparing to order from 4,000 to 5,000 reserve officers to report for active duty.

For the most part, they will be young first and second lieutenants, not long out of college Reserve Officers Training Corps, and their chief job will be to train recruits.

The strength of the Army is now being pushed to 280,000 men, and another 205,000 will be added later. Thus the prospect is that more and more reserve officers will be called

THOUGHTS WHILE SHAVING

I wonder if someone's kidding those Nazi soldiers who march arm-in-arm into the machine guns . . . Telling 'em they're facing fifth columnists who won't shoot . . . To my mind the sourest jibe of the year is Congressman Lambertson's . . . He suggested that the President put Mrs. FDR in a concentration camp . . . That might beat him even in Kansas . . . Queer notion abroad in the land that the Capital "hasn't got its feet on the ground" . . . When Washington is filled with the elect from every Main street in the Republic . . . FDR's emotion got the best of him in his speech this week when he said "far ago," meaning "long ago" . . . That little exhibit of knitted sox and scarves at the British Embassy looked a little pathetic, in the claws of the Lion . . . Wonder whether the German Embassy could draw 5,000 to a "Bundles for Berlin" garden party . . . They'd get more bandwaggoners and campfollowers than you suspect.

"—feet off the ground?"

Did FDR take Senator Jimmy Byrnes up on a high place and talk him out of wanting to be Vice President? . . . Jimmy began to ask (after his cruise on the Potomac) why people didn't talk more of Justice Douglas for v. p. . . . Wonder if petite Mrs. Douglas still prefers her hubby as a Justice than as v. p.? . . . Even if FDR might resign in mid-third-term and thus elevate her to First Lady? . . . Some members of Congress who aren't good at making love know how to sell hatred to their dumber constituents . . . That doesn't go for Senator Bob Reynolds, of course . . . He's good at both . . . They say Vandenberg abandoned isolation six months too late . . . At the last two big parties, diplomats of the enemy countries rubbed elbows . . . One frivolous gal said she expected some Nazis to roar up in a high-powered car and hold up the ticket takers who had $5,000 at the British Embassy gates . . . Shows how people talk . . . Forty Senators listened to Senator Pepper's longest war speech . . . A record! . . . Even Norris can't get that many nowadays . . . I wish Pepper would get another gesture besides that two-handed milking motion . . . But he's the prize Rookie of the Session . . . Life size . . . Most of the Senators remind me of that famous cartoon of the passenger in a plane about to crash into a mountain who yells, "My God! We're out of gin!" . . . All this war seems as unreal and preposterous as the dreams I used to have as a kid of being chased by a 16-foot turkey gobbler and losing all my clothes on the way to school . . . At breakfast the b.b. (who's 7) asked if the French and German soldiers ever got close together and fought with their fists . . . Pity the way the youngsters are getting this war drummed into their ears . . . I think I could find Mussolini's palace myself in a plane and his Villa Torlonia, too . . .

"—one foot on, one foot off."

It isn't true that the Capital hasn't got its feet on the ground . . . I think it's more accurate to say that it has one foot on its desk and one foot on the ground . . . If they can put 4,000,000 into uniform why can't they put 4,000,000 into jobs? . . . I'll never forget my first razor that I lost in Nancy, France . . . And now they've bombed Nancy again . . . And remember the Italian troops put to work digging ditches behind Soissons after they were routed at Caporreto . . . I used to get seven shaves out of a blade with that first razor . . . My beard was softer . . . Queerest sight I've seen here was the fight on the water front between two colored roustabouts near that prosperous bloke's yacht in the Potomac, as seen from the balcony of the sea-food restaurant . . . Like an apache dance for tourists in a Paris night-spot . . . Paris won't ever be the same again . . . No place will . . . None of us will.

G. O. P. Leaders Arrive to Draft Party Platform for Convention

Conclave Opens in 10 Days, Committee Plans Arrangements

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, June 15.—Members of the Republican National Committee began arriving today, nine days before the Presidential nominating convention, for meetings to draft a party platform, decide State delegation contests and complete arrangements for the convention itself.

At the same time, representatives of Thomas E. Dewey unfurled a blue and white banner from a Broad Street hotel and opened headquarters for the New York District Attorney's candidacy. The Dewey-for-President people have taken 78 rooms in two hotels.

Headquarters for two other nomination seekers, Sen. Robert A. Taft and Publisher Frank E. Gannett, were opened earlier this week. The Ohio Senator has engaged 102 rooms; Gannett, the Harvard Club and 48 hotel rooms.

John D. M. Hamilton, Republican National Chairman, is expected here tomorrow with his Washington staff. He will gavel the convention to order a week from Monday.

The convention may last five days or a week instead of the customary four days, Hamilton believes.

Plans Anti-War Plank

The 50-man Republican Resolutions Committee meets here Monday to hew planks for the party platform. One of the toughest of the group's problems will be the wording of an antiwar plank, members predicted. As a guide in their policy-making deliberations, the committee will use the report submitted by Dr. Glenn Frank's program committee after two years' study.

J. Leonard Replogle and John Jackson, national committeemen from Florida and Louisiana, respectively, arrived today for a meeting of the national committee Wednesday to hear several contests over seats on delegations from their States and from Mississippi, South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia, Illinois, Michigan, Missouri and Alaska.

Representative Bruce Barton (Republican), of New York, announced today that he had accepted an invitation from Wendell Willkie to second his nomination at the Philadelphia convention. Willkie makes his New York home in Barton's district. Barton, himself is among the "dark horses."

Michigan Backs 3d Term

Flint, Mich., June 15.—The Michigan Democratic State convention today unanimously indorsed President Roosevelt for a third term, in a resolution that demanded that he accept renomination "and the assured election it entails."

James Assails Propaganda

Chattanooga, Tenn., June 15 (INS).—The overture to a new American tragedy is in full swing and the propaganda mills are grinding overtime to drag the United States into war and a dictatorship, Gov. Arthur James of Pennsylvania declared in Chattanooga tonight in a Nation-wide radio broadcast.

Speaking to "the women of America" at a meeting of the Republican Congressional Executive Committee of the Third District of Tennessee, the Pennsylvania Governor said:

"The propaganda mills of the New Dealers, the Third Termites and unfortunately even some who call themselves Republicans are working overtime trying to sell America full participation in the war abroad.

"War and dictatorship! If we get one, we get the other. The mobilization bills make it unmistakably clear that we cannot have one without the other."

conditions, the Government of the United States has made it possible for the Allied armies to obtain during the weeks that have just passed airplanes, artillery and munitions of many kinds and that this Government so long as the Allied governments continue to resist will redouble its efforts in this direction.

Aid Will Increase

"I believe it is possible to say that every week that goes by will see additional materiel on its way to the Allied nations.

"In accordance with its policy not to recognize the results of conquest of territory acquired through military aggression, the Government of the United States will not consider as valid any attempts to infringe by force the independence and territorial integrity of France.

"In these hours which are so heart-rending for the French people and yourself, I send you the assurances of my utmost sympathy and I can further assure you that so long as the French people continue in defense of their liberty which constitutes the cause of popular institutions throughout the world, so long will they rest assured that materiel and supplies will be sent to them from the United States in ever-increasing quantities and kinds.

"I know that you will understand that these statements carry with them no implication of military commitments. Only the Congress can make such commitments."

British Grateful

The first European reaction to the President's message came from London, where the Associated Press reported British authorities bespoke the "sincere gratitude" of the British pepole.

Roosevelt's assurance that his promise had no military implications was described as being "fully understood and appreciated" in Britain.

PWA's Work Nearly Done; Cost $6,000,000,000

The Public Works Administration announced yesterday that its work is practically done, at a cost of nearly $6,000,000,000.

Col. E. W. Clark, acting PWA commissioner, reported to Federal Works Administrator John M. Carmody that of 16,648 non-Federal projects, 16,136 have been completed, 503 are under construction and only 9 have not been started.

The PWA in seven years allotted $2,317,782,736 to the 16,648 projects estimated to cost $4,211,160,449 and allotted $1,775,542,395 to Government agencies for 17,820 Federal projects.

Of the PWA money on May 1, $1,551,224,455 had been spent for wages.

Parley June 21-24 To Discuss Coming Christian Mission

Increased interest in the forthcoming National Christian Mission and a demand that suburban areas be included in the Washington mission has necessitated five preliminary sessions here from June 21-24, instead of four originally planned.

The National Christian Mission, which will be held in 22 major metropolitan areas, comes here from February 2-9, 1941.

Discussing the advance meetings which Dr. Guy Black, of New York, field secretary of the mission for the Federal Council of Churches, will conduct, Dr. Horace E. Cromer emphasized yesterday that the additional meeting will cover the Arlington, Fairfax and Alexandria area, and be held on June 21 at 1 p. m. at the Washington Golf and Country Club.

Millions Want Noninterventionist, Says Sen. Johnson

Saying that President Roosevelt "holds up to bitter scorn any one who dares to think in terms of isolation," Senator Johnson (Democrat), Colorado, declared last night that millions of people would form a third party unless either the Democrats or Republicans nominate a Presidential candidate "who is not an interventionist."

Johnson, a supporter of Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, for the Presidential nomination, said in an address over the Mutual Broadcasting System that both parties would adopt platform planks paying "lip-service to peace," but that they would "not be worth the paper upon which they are written."

Tallahassee, Fla., June 15 (AP).—The Tallahassee Democrat received from Chelan, Wash., yesterday an offer to trade Senator Homer Bone (Democrat), of Washington and two Congressmen for Senator Claude Pepper (Democrat), of Florida.

The offer came in a telegram signed "Lake Chelan Lions Club, by R. M. Pickett, secretary," reporting the club had adopted unanimously this resolution:

"Resolved, that the Lake Chelan Lions Club would like to trade our Senator Homer T. Bone and two assorted Congressmen for your forthright Senator Pepper, who has the candor to speak his mind upon crucial affairs of the day."

British Speak Of 'Gratitude' To Roosevelt

Answer to Reynaud Appeal Is 'Generous,' Say London Officials

By the Associated Press

London, June 15.—British authorities expressed "sincere gratitude" tonight for President Roosevelt's promise of aid to the Allies as long as they "continue to resist."

The French cabinet, having met today without announcement, will meet again tomorrow. Then it can consider the Roosevelt message.

Mr. Roosevelt's response to French Premier Reynaud's "final" appeal for help was called here a "generous" one.

His "assurance that the United States will redouble its efforts to send planes and munitions to the Allies as long as the Allied governments continue to resist," these sources added, "is especially welcome and his explanation that this assurance carries with it no implications of military character and that only Congress can make such commitments is fully understood and appreciated."

Italian View

Rome, June 15 (AP).—President Roosevelt's promise of continued aid for France and Great Britain became known too late tonight for official Italian reaction. Italians have insisted, however, that the United States could not bring effective help to the Allies in time to stave off their defeat.

Ineffective, Says Berlin

Berlin (Sunday), June 16. (AP).—The opinion of informed quarters in Berlin today was that President Roosevelt's promise of further aid for the French and British held out "little prospect of effective help to the Allies."

It was pointed out here that the continuance of material aid from America was conditioned by the President on continued resistance by the Allies against Germany.

Germans were confident that such resistance would be crushed soon and that at least in France there would be no one remaining in a position to use American materials even if available.

Comment Omitted

Roosevelt's warm expression of sympathy for France caused no surprise or resentment here—his attitude toward the warring powers being accepted as "a fact which cannot be altered."

DNB, official German news agency, carried the gist of the Roosevelt message without comment.

Lieut. Col. Hesse, military commentator writing for Volkischer Beobachter, said the United States no longer was in position to give much material assistance to France because French Atlantic harbors were being seized by the Germans and those still in French hands were increasingly menaced by the German air force.

Italy, he wrote, may be counted upon to close the French Mediterranean ports.

Defense Tax Rider Orders 10% Cut in U.S. Costs

President Roosevelt is directed to cut Government expenditures 10 per cent, except those for National defense and fixed charges, in the $1,007,000,000 defense tax bill as adopted yesterday by the Senate Finance Committee.

The amendment for the 10 per cent slash was offered by Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia. Byrd explained that it does not require a horizontal cut of that amount. The President, he said, can determine where the cuts shall be made from the total remaining after elimination of defense expenditures and fixed charges.

The bill, which carries other amendments to the measure as approved by the House, will be brought to the Senate floor tomorrow, Chairman Harrison announced.

The bill would create 2,190,000 new income tax payers by lowering the existing exemptions from $2,500 to $2,000 for married persons and from $1,000 to $800 for single individuals.

It also would increase corporation and so-called "nuisance" taxes (levies on gasoline, theater tickets, automobile tires, etc.), would raise all personal income levies by a flat 10 per cent, and would increase the Federal debt limit from $45,000,000,000 to $49,000,000,000.

In an unexpected move, the committee also wrote into the bill legislation by Senator Townsend (Republican), of Delaware, to end Treasury purchases of foreign silver.

The committee knocked out a House provision increasing tobacco taxes and substituted a new, higher schedule of amusement levies. As finally drafted, the committee bill would provide $3,000,000 more than the House measure.

The tobacco levies, including an increase from 6 to 7 cents a package on cigarettes, were estimated to yield $76,000,000 a year. The new amusement tax schedule, designed to raise approximately the same amount, would impose a 10 per cent tax on all admissions costing 10 cents or more. The House had voted to start the tax at 30 cents, instead of at 40 cents as provided in existing law.

The Senate committee also approved an increase from 30 to 40 cents in the tax on rectified whisky.

The flat 10 per cent increase on income taxes had been tagged "supertax" by the House, but because Senator Brown (Democrat), Michigan, said that "doesn't sound good to the taxpayer, "the committee amended the bill to designate it a "defense tax."

Arnold Cites Plots on Vital U. S. Industries

Institute Hears Charge Of Collusive Bidding On Army, Navy Contracts

By Hedley Donovan,
A Staff Correspondent

Charlottesville, Va., June 15.—Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold tonight charged unnamed companies with collusive bidding on Army and Navy contracts, transmission of American military secrets to foreign concerns and division of markets and price-fixing in vital defense materials.

The antitrust division of te Justice Department also has discovered foreign control of prices and production in key industries in this country and "throttling of American capacity to produce essential war materials by foreign ownership and control of patents," Arnold said.

Vigorous enforcement of antitrust legislation will protect the defense program from these threats to vital industries, he told the Institute of Public Affairs.

Arnold asserted that antitrust laws also will defend American living standards against "war inflation." Such laws, he said, are the country's "front line of defense against the unreasonable use of industrial power" and its strongest brake on rising prices in a rearmament boom.

Preaching Not Effective

"Preaching about patriotism was not effective in the last war and will not be effective in this war," he added.

Arnold's address was one of a dozen on American economic, foreign and military policies heard here today, as the institute continued to focus its attention on "The United States and a World at War."

Maj. D. T. Craw, military intelligence officer with the general headquarters air force, urged immediate creation of "an independent, long-range striking force of four-engine bombers."

Use of such a force, or the threat to use it, should prevent any hostile nation from attempting to set up bases on or near the Western Hemisphere, he asserted.

Maj. Craw said, "I don't care whether this air fleet is assigned to the Army, Navy or Coast Guard—the point is we need it." The country now has 50 four-engine bombers, he stated.

Yet to See Real Use

"We have yet to see a real use of air power in the present war," he warned, listing as the nearest examples the first two days of the Polish campaign, German raids on Scapa Flow and British raids on Hamburg, Bremen and Sylt. He called the present operations in France a display of overwhelming land power.

With employment of "real air power," the United States could check any "step-by-step advance of an enemy through other countries of this hemisphere," he declared.

Capt. Charles M. Cooke, of the Navy Department's war plans division, said the prospect of Japanese domination of trade movements in the Pacific and German control over a large part of the Atlantic "may appear fantastic, but does not appear as incredible as did the present situation two years ago."

The naval officer said, "It is not difficult to imagine" a series of events in which establishment of Nazi regimes in the southern part of South America paralleled the spread of Japanese domination over the western Pacific.

Then Spread Northward

"The next step would be the spread northward through South America of Nazi control, Nazi ideologies, Nazi economy, to points from which the Caribbean and the Panama Canal could be more directly threatened, paralleled with direct threat to Hawaii and Alaska in the Pacific," he continued.

Without actually advocating acquisition of new naval bases, Capt. Cooke said the United States could most effectively check the threat in the Atlantic from bases between the Azores and the Cape Verde Islands, on the west coast of Africa or on the Brazilian coast. A base west of Hawaii would bolster the country's Pacific defenses, he said.

William L. Ransom, former president of the American Bar Association, in a review of labor laws and the defense program, said preservation of American liberties now depends largely on "our skill and capacity in mass production."

Urges Labor Act Change

"The tragic experience of France and England suggests that talk of preparedness can amount to little more than talk," if present restrictions on the maximum hours of work are maintained, Ransom contended.

He urged adoption of the Smith amendments to the National Labor Relations Act, adding that "the Government can hardly wage continuous war on employers for refusing to surrender to the C. I. O. faction of labor organization, and then expect those employers to be able to give maximum assistance to the Government in the tasks of preparedness to fight the Communist-Fascist alliance abroad."

Truck Driver Weeps at Inquest Into Slaying Of Policeman, Is Held for Grand Jury Action

Witnesses Testify Prisoner Fired Shots in a Daze

A squat, massive colored truck driver, Clarence Blocker, 23, who wept as he awaited the verdict of a coroner's jury, was held for the action of the grand jury yesterday, charged with the slaying Friday of Park Policeman Ivan W. Thompson.

For three and one-half hours Bocker sat stolidly in the inquest room of the District Morgue and watched 18 witnesses describe the ferocious battle that ensued when he allegedly resisted arrest, wrested Thompson's gun away and fired five bullets into the policeman's body.

As Deputy Coroner Christopher J Murphy, the last witness, took the stand to describe the fatal wounds, Blocker's head nodded, and he bent over, asleep.

He awoke as the jury left the box. In the next 15 minutes, as the jury deliberated, tears welled from his eyes, and he wiped them on the sleeve of his torn, blood-spattered, blue-striped shirt.

Cab Driver Testifies

Thompson sought to arrest the truck driver for a traffic violation after a motor chase that ended with a collision between the policeman's car and the truck at First and I streets northeast.

District Attorney Edward Curran, attending his first inquest since his appointment, directed the presentation of prosecution evidence. He said later that the case would go to the grand jury at 10 a. m. tomorrow.

Blocker, his forehead covered with bandages, heard Willard E. Shearin, a cab driver, of 305 Seaton place northeast, testify to the eyewitness acount he gave a Post reporter at the scene.

Several witnesses testified that Blocker fired the first two shots at Thompson when both men suddenly jumped to their feet in the midst of the battle. Others said the shots were fired as the men struggled on the ground.

He Looked Dazed

All agreed that Blocker stood over Thompson's prostrate body with a dazed look on his face, turned around slowly in a complete circle, then fired, the remaining three bullets at the policeman.

Edward Blocker, brother of the prisoner, testified that Clarence borrowed the truck without permission and did not possess a driver's permit.

Private Ewell T. Wade, of Second Precinct, who was summoned by a witness to the shooting, testified that he had to fire two shots at Blocker before the truck driver dropped Thompson's gun and surrendered.

Pvts. Henry J. Peterson of First Precinct, and L. A. Harnet of the Traffic Division, testified that they were forced to strike Blocker over the head several times with their blackjacks before he entered the patrol wagon. Peterson said he suffered a possible fracture to two ribs in the struggle and required medical treatment.

The Police and Fire Post of the American Legion will hold special services for Mr. Thompson tomorrow at 8 p. m. in Hysong's funeral home, 1300 N street northwest. Final rites will be held in St. Francis de Sales Church, Twentieth street and Rhode Island avenue northeast, Tuesday at 10 a. m. Burial will follow in Arlington Cemetery.

Fall of Verdun Threatens Entire Maginot Line With Collapse, Germans Claim

Other Forts In Chain Open On 2 Flanks

France's World Wonder Virtually Doomed, Say Nazi Military Experts

By the Associated Press

Berlin, June 15.—Germany military sources said today that capture of heavily fortified Verdun had caused collapse of "the most famous world wonder of our day"—France's Maginot Line.

This was the German military account of the fall of Verdun, and the position of the flanked French forts:

"To raise the Nazi war flag over the citadel of Verdun, German troops had to fight through a line of outer forts. Two of these forts at Vaux (5 miles northeast of Verdun) were stormed and taken this forenoon. Other troops coming from the North and West took Dead Man's Ridge, overlooking Verdun, yesterday.

"Now Verdun has fallen.

"Crushing bombardment, particularly from bombing planes, apparently had the same paralyzing effect on the Maginot Line as they did on defenses in Belgium, which were patterned after it.

Attacked by Land and Air

"German troops stormed in while swarms of Stukas dived to attack, and artillery of all caliber rained shells on the forts and pillboxes hour after hour.

"In the World War Verdun was the northern corner of a fortified line established against Germany which then was of the same importance as the Maginot Line today. When Maginot built the fortified line bearing his name, old fortresses from Belfort to Verdun were to form a strong second defense. (Maginot was then French minister of defense.)

"Verdun was given an important role to protect the flank of the Maginot Line against possible German advance through Belgium. The old fortress was therefore renovated and modernized at great cost.

Now It's Breached

"Now the Maginot Line has been breached south of Saarbrucken on a broad front. The fortresses of Metz, Toul and Belfort are exposed to encirclement, and there exists the possibility of getting at the French Rhine front from the back and rolling it up.

"Thus France's entire western fortification—most famous world wonder of our day—collapses.

"Conquering by an audacious 'coup de main' dash—even if supported by heavy artillery and dive bombers—was only possible if the barrison (of the fort) was extremely weakened or morally so shaken that it could not resist."

Central Voting Place To Cut Cost Proposed

Frederick, Md., June 15.—Last Tuesday's triennial municipal election cost $3,730, according to the list of expenditures ordered paid by the outgoing mayor and board of aldermen last night.

As a means of reducing expenses and eliminating complaints, it has been suggested by city officials that a bill be introduced at the next session of the Legislature to provide for one central voting place at municipal elections. Officials believe the plan would solve the difficulty experienced by voters who confuse their precincts in municipal voting with those in State and county elections.

Verdun HasFallen, Germans Report

general headquarters asserts, the city and citadels of Verdun are now in their hands.

French in "Rout"

At the same time, all along the wide front stretching from the Lower Seine at Le Havre westward to the Meuse, the Germans declare they are "pursuing" the enemy in what is described in military quarters of Berlin as a rout.

Groups of enemy troops have surrendered without offering resistance, and as a result, it is claimed, another 100,000 prisoners have been taken in the past two days, bringing the grand total since June 5 to more than 200,000, the Germans claim. The haul, in catpured war materials, it is said, "cannot yet be estimated."

With the break in the Maginot Line, however, the fate of the French forces appears to be sealed. Having forced a wide gap in the northern leg of the triangle of the Maginot fortifications and having captured Verdun and with the fall of Metz reported imminent—the Germans appear to be in a position to flank not only the rest of the northern leg—extending approximately from Saargemund to Longwy, but also to attack the western leg from several sides at the same time.

Headquarters says nothing today of the German armies reported yesterday to have taken Vitry-le-Francois. It is believed, however, that they are advancing as quickly as possible toward Belfort, the southern tip of the Maginot fortifications, in order to close a sack around the Maginot triangle and trap as many of the defenders of the line as possible.

Rear Areas Bombed

The German command, furthermore, seemingly desires to push other French forces into the Maginot sack it appears to be preparing. The high command declares "south of Argonne Forest the enemy was thrown back toward the southeast and off the course of his retreat."

In the triangle of Verdun, Metz and Belfort, the German air force yesterday enjoyed a bomb dropping field day. Troop concentrations and movements on railroads, highways, trains and railroad rights of way were all bombed and strafed.

The breaking of the Maginot Line was a tough job, the Germans admit. For the soldiers manning it, they assert, represent the best of the remaining French divisions who have fought and still are fighting valiantly. The resistance offered here they declare was quite different from that they are encountering south of Paris. On the latter wide front general headquarters declares they are opposed by forces hastily thrown together by the French command from remnants of divisions already beaten by the German armies, or by second line troops.

Dissolution of the latter enemy forces, the German high command claims, continues.

To the German press, however, the most significant accomplishment of the Reich's legions yesterday was the capture of Versailles with the raising of the Third Reich's war flag over the palace. It was in the Hall of Mirrors of ersailles that the First Reich under Prince Bismarck was born in 1871—and died what the Germans declare was a "shameful" death in 1919.

Not Discussing Peace

Berlin, June 15 (AP).—An authorized German spokesman refused to comment tonight on reports which he said were current in other European capitals to the effect that the French government has asked or accepted German terms for a separate peace.

"The German attitude up to this moment (11:50 p. m.) is that the campaign to destroy the enemy military power must go on without relenting," the spokesman remarked.

Dienst Aus Deutschland, authoritative German commentary, observed:

"Concerning rumors of an armistice or peace negotiations, it is explained that such matters no longer are discussed, but the remnants of Franco-English troops on the continent will be destroyed."

Germany is about to float her first public war loan, it was said tonight in financial circles.

The amount to be asked was not stated.

Heretofore the war armament costs have been borne by direct taxation and the proceeds of privately negotiated short-term loans.

Bonds bearing 4 per cent annual interest will be sold at 90.75 to mature in ten years. Units available vary from 500 to 500,000 marks.

The German news agency, DNB, said tonight that the Allies are approaching a critical shortage of oil "whereas Germany's situation is improving as a result of Italy's entry in the war."

No figures were disclosed because these are regarded as important military information, but the news agency listed as reasons for the "improvement:"

1. Increased deliveries from Russia.
2. Seizure of vast stores in the Netherlands and Belgium.
3. Italy's declaration of war, thus diverting to Germany deliveries of Rumanian oil previously sent to the Allies through the Mediterranean.

Italy's entry also cut off the Mediterranean route for oil deliveries to the Allies from the Near East, D. N. B. said.

Germany was reported to have increased greatly her production of synthetic gasoline far warplanes and tanks.

Mexican Labor Leaders Turn Against Nazis

Workers Told To Aid Fight On 5th Column

Predicts Russians Will Fight Hitler; Party Line Reversed

Copyright by New York Times

Mexico City, June 15.—The public sessions of the Congress of the Confederation of Latin American Workers, of which Vincente Lombardo Toledano, secretary of C. T. M. (Confederation of Mexican Workers) is president, came to an end today with two violently anti-Nazi, anti-Fascist speeches by Perez Lieros, the Argentine delegate, and Toledano.

Both urged the workers of all the Americas to unite in fighting the Rome-Berlin axis not passively but actively. Lombardo Toledano said he believes that before the European war is over, the Soviet will be fighting against Germany.

Lieros, after laying the blame for the war on the Hitler-Stalin understanding, said any move by the American continent tending to weaken France and Great Britain would have tragic consequences for American workers. They must, therefore, form a united front against Nazism.

Attacks Fifth Column

The Americas, he said, must realize the danger of a fifth column and effective measures against it must be taken. To fail to give Britain and France effective help, he ended, is equivalent to permitting a Hitlerist world revolution.

Lombardo said the world situation obliges workers to collaborate with the bourgeoisie because workers would weaken themselves if they fought simultantously against fascism and bourgeoisie. American workers must declare war against Nazis and Fascists, he declared, and their war must be a war of attack, not defense, in which all workers and all governments of Latin America must participate.

After expressing the conviction that Russia will ultimately join the war against Germany "because a definitive alliance between these two countries is absurd," Lombardo Toledano said the Americas now are threatened from outside and must strengthen democratic institutions to defeat Nazism and Fascism and establish truly democratic governments in Europe.

"All peoples in America," he ended, "must unite without hesitation against Nazism to prevent it from becoming the government of the whole world."

An About Face

[Lombardo Toledano's speech apparently represents as startling an about face as that he executed in the opposite direction last fall. Before the war, Lombardo Toledano and the C. T. M. were following the Communist tactic of supporting the democracies against the Nazi-Fascist axis. Then after the Russo-German agreement of August, they began attacking the democracies as "imperialist."

[Since then, El Popular, the C. T. M.'s newspaper, had been increasingly pro-German, even subscribing to the Transocean News Service, foreign branch of the official German news agency, D.N.B.

[Lombardo Toledano's speech, therefore, is regarded as indicating a second reversal in policy, but there was no indication whether the reversal was the result of suddenly altered Community Party views, or whether he was following the Mexican government's attitude, which has been somewhat pro-Ally in recent weeks. Editor's Note.]

Fascists Woo Colombia

Bogota, Colombia, June 15.—In evident disregard of Fuehrer Hitler's past and recent statement to the effect that he was not interested in the Americas, local Nazi fifth columnists are promising to return Panama and the canal to Colombia.

Flysheets distributed clandestinely suggest that Colombia desert the United States and join Germany and Italy. Then the Third Reich at the proper time will restore the former province now the Republic of Panama together with the canal. Flysheets distributed here apparently are printed in Germany and probably shipped to Colombia on Italian ships.

Montevideo, June 15.—Uruguay's investigation of Nazi activities has proved conclusively that democracy throughout South America is seriously threatened by two sinister movements which have spread their operations over the entire continent.

One is composed of Nazi Party units in each one of ten South American republics, operating on direct instructions from Germany and under the close supervision of German diplomatic missions in each country. The other is made up of local sympathizers with Nazi policies, and has become popularly known as the fifth column.

Documentary evidence of the operations of these two movements will be presented to the Uruguayan Congress next week by the special investigating committee appointed several weeks ago. Sources close to this committee say its report will be of a highly sensational nature.

The two movements are separate and distinct, but are working in close cooperation for the achievement of the same goal—an undermining of democracy and its eventual overthrow, and its replacement by some South American form of totalitarianism.

5th Columnists Worst

The most sinister of the two movements unquestionably is the fifth column, because it is composed of citizens in various republics who, no matter how sincere their misguided ideals, are acting as traitors against their own governments.

These fifth columns are composed of disgruntled politicians hungry for power, army officers who see a brighter future for the military class under a dictatorship than under a democracy, young theorists, mostly college and university graduates whose faith in democracy has been destroyed by Fascist and Nazi professors, and adventurers tempted by the prospects of careers in a worldwide Nazi Reich.

Many of these malcontents have enjoyed free trips to Germany as guests of the German government or other German organizations. Some are national leaders of recognized ability, who make no effort to mask their open admiration of Hitler and his methods.

The Nazi party units in South America are cogs of Hitler's international machine known as the Auslands organization, or Germany abroad.

This foreign organization of the Nazi Party was formally incorporated into the Reich's ministry of foreign affairs by decree on January 30, 1937. Its units in each country are under the leadership of a Gauleiter or "Little Fuehrer." Names of some of these district leaders become immortalized in history as a result of their efficiency in preparing the path for a German invasion of their countries.

In Austria it was Seyss-Inquart, in Czecho-Slovakia, Henlein, and in Norway, Quisling. Each South American country has its district leader or little fuehrer ready to follow their examples.

In Argentina it is Alfred Muller, and in Uruguay Julius Dalldorf. These district leaders work under the supervision of German diplomatic missions and often are members of the staffs of embassies, legations or consulates.

Their instructions from Germany and their reports to Germany are sent through diplomatic channels, enjoying the immunity extended by all countries to diplomatic pouches.

Egypt Raided, British Take 2 Libyan Forts

Cairo Weighs War; Four Fascist Officers, 100 Troops Captured

By the Associated Press

Alexandria, June 15. — Egypt moved rapidly tonight toward a full war footing, preparing to join her ally, Britain, in fighting Italy the moment her territory is invaded.

Indications that this might come soon were seen during the day in the sharp fighting between Italian and British troops on the Egyptian-Libyan frontier and the continuous action of the Royal Air Force in bombing enemy positions.

The capture of the Italian forts of Capruzzo and Maddalena was announced.

Italian planes attacked the Egyptian outposts of Sollum, Shegga and Weshka, but damage was slight

Four Officers Captured

A communique issued in Cairo said:

"The R. A. F. yesterday successfully bombed Fort Capuzzo following which the fort was occupied by land forces. The combined operations resulted in the capture of 4 officers and 100 native prisoners. Fort Maddalena, also near the frontier, also surrendered. Enemy bombers attacked Salum and frontier posts held by the Egyptians at Shagga and Weshka. Little material damage was done."

While British planes continued air attacks in Eritrea and Libya, direct hits by the South African Air Force on Italian barracks and buildings at two undisclosed places in southern Ethiopia were reported by the Union of South Africa.

The Egyptian attitude toward Italy's isolated thrusts at Egyptian soil was not immediately defined.

Parliament Held Ready

The government — which had warned that Italian attacks on Egyptian territory would bring a declaration of war—was tensely watching developments.

Parliament was held in readiness for emergency steps.

Informed sources said they could not see how Egypt could long remain out of the conflict, because it was almost certain that the Italians would attack in an effort to reach Allied bases.

Measures for the defense of Alexandria and other important towns were speeded. All civilians here were advised to leave immediately. Special trains carried thousands of old men, women and children into the interior villages.

Italians Bomb Tunis

Algiers, June 15 (U.P.).—Italian bombers raided Tunis twice yesterday afternoon, it was reported today. A number of civilians were casualties.

South Africans Make Raid

Nairobi, Kenya, June 15 (U.P.).—The South Africa Air Force today was reported to have bombed the airdrome at Kismaya, Ethiopia, causing extensive damage to a barracks filled with troops. Direct hits were scored on airdrome buildings and several were set afire. A small patrol of the King's African Rifles raided an Ethiopian post and captured two prisoners in the first ground action of the campaign.

34 Killed in Malta

Valetta, Malta, June 15 (U.P.).—Casualties in Italian air raids on Malta totaled 34 dead and 132 wounded up to yesterday afternoon, it was reported today. There were nine air alarms Thursday but all military objectives are intact. Duds fell Friday on the 600-year-old Knights' Cathedral.

Italian Boat Sinks Warship in Genoa Raid

By the Associated Press

Rome, June 15.—A dawn naval attack on Genoa in which the French lost a destroyer, and the occupation of French territory on the Alpine frontier were reported today by the Italian high command.

The Italian advance across the frontier, experts indicated, was part of the plan for German and Italian soldiers to break the last French resistance after the fall of Paris. The high command said that "some localities beyond the border" were occupied.

[The New York Times said there was a strong but unconfirmed report that a heavy offensive had been launched in the direction of Nice, and the United Press quoted "reliable Italian quarters" as claiming another offensive is under way through Mount Cenis or Little St. Bernard passes toward Chambery, in Savoy.

[The Times added that the general Italian belief that France's military collapse is near lent plausibility to the rumors of Italian offensives.]

With France crushed, Italian sources explained, both Axis powers could attack the British—Germany striking at England while Italy assaulted British bases in the Mediterranean.

The Fascist press hailed as a heroic naval feat the sinking by an old torpedo boat, the 967-ton Calatafimi, of a French destroyer which sailed with eight other French warships to bombard Genoa and the Ligurian Riviera.

Italians said the attack of the torpedo boat and heavy fire from coastal batteries drove off the French warships but not until three persons were killed and 12 were wounded.

Another destroyer was reported damaged by a torpedo from the Calatafimi.

The Genoa naval raid casualties were among ten civilians killed and 33 wounded during the last few days in naval and air raids on Turin and the port cities of Genoa, Savona, Imperia and Venice.

An aged woman was slightly hurt, authorities announced, by the explosion of an antiaircraft shell against a building in Rome when planes, believed to have been French, flew over the capital yesterday and scattered leaflets.

Big Red Army Enters Lithuania, Nazi Buffer State

A border incident at the Russian-Latvian frontier in which a border guard post was burned, two Latvian frontier guards killed, and a woman and boy wounded, is being investigated by Latvian authorities. And in the light of today's events, the explosion of an airplane, over the Finnish Bay yesterday in which nine persons, including two French, and one American diplomatic courier were killed, has assumed new significance.

Aside from the fate of the small countries involved, interest in diplomatic quarters has centered, upon the significance of the Russian action in the greater European tragedy now reaching its climax on the blood-soaked fields of France.

Coming at a time of persistent rumors from German and Italian sources that the French government might sue for a separate peace, the massing of Russian troops in the Baltic is found to have only one interpretation:

It was not so much a move against the Baltic states, as such, but a Russian effort to strengthen her bulwarks against Germany.

According to some reports here Russia plans to put no less than 500,000 troops in Lithuania alone, and perhaps as many more in other Baltic countries. She already is presumed to have approximately 1,000,000 men in Poland along the border between the Russian and the German "spheres of interest."

German official quarters in Berlin ventured no comment on the Russian move in Lithuania beyond the curt statement that the Reich would not intervene in any way.

"It is a matter which concerns Russia and Lithuania alone," it was stated, "the Reich, therefore, has no intention of interfering."

The Reich chooses to ignore the whole affair by not printing a single word about the Soviet march-in.

Germany, however, is reported to be massing troops along the demarkation line in Poland, as well as along the German Lithuania border.

The inference is that having encouraged Germany to plunge into war through the German-Russian nonaggression pact which saved Germany from the menace of a two-front war, Russia now fears the consequences of a decisive German victory, and is taking precautions against her partner in the partition of Poland. German officers freely predicted, even during the Polish campaign, that sooner or later Germany will have to fight Russia.

At the same time, though the Russian move may bind increasing numbers of German troops in the east, some quarters here discounted any hopes of the western powers that Russia may intervene in the war against Germany at this time. The Russian move is considered to be a purely defensive one. Russia, it is believed, will not move either against Germany or in the Balkans—at least, not until war has weakened Germany much more than it has so far.

Diplomatic technicalities that preceded the Russian invasion began with Russian complaints that Soviet soldiers stationed in Lithuania had been kidnaped. This led to trips by the Lithuanian premier and the Lithuanian foreign minister to Moscow, where they met with increasingly stringent demands from the Kremlin. Today the Russians charged that Lithuania had violated the spirit of the Russo-Lithuanian pact by concluding a secret military treaty with Latvia and Estonia which bodes ill for the latter countries as well.

Russia demanded, therefore, a new Lithuanian government and the punishment of those responsible for the "Kidnappings," especially General Skucas, Lithuanian minister of the interior, and the police chief, M. Povajlitis.

As a result of these demands, which Lithuania accepted, the government of Premier Antonas Berkys resigned last night and General Rastikis, the former commander-in-chief of the Lithuanian army, was charged with forming a new government.

But General Rastikis was declared persona non grata to the Russian government, and the Kremlin sent special representatives to Kaunas to pick its own government which will have to take measures against the "anti-Soviet" elements in Lithuania. The Sovietization of Lithuania, therefore, is regarded as merely a matter of time.

Riga, Latvia, June 15 (U.P.).—The Soviet occupation of Lithuania created an atmosphere of acute tension in this neighboring capital tonight.

The official Latvian news agency issued a statement denying the Soviet charge that Lithuania, Latvia and Esthonia had joined in a secret military alliance.

Nazi Pact Signed

Moscow, June 15 (AP).—Soviet Russia gained by ultimatum today "free passage" into Lithuania—the little country bordering Germany on East Prussia—of an unlimited number of troops of the Red army.

At the same time signing five days ago of a covenant between Soviet Russia and Germany on procedure for settlement of any "conflicts or incidents" occurring on their common frontier in Poland was announced.

War Entry Seen

Stockholm, June 15 (AP).—The march of the Red Army into Lithuania today under a forced grant of "free passage" may be the forerunner of a Russian move to establish a half-million troops near the German border, a foreign informant said today.

There has been speculation that Russian, allied with Germany in an accord of "practical cooperation," might now regret it or consider divergences from this accord because of concern over Nazi expansion in Scandinavia.

Pensions' Tax, Auto Levy Rise Here Attacked

Protest Petitions Filed With District Board of Appeals

Right of the District to tax pensions paid by the Railroad Retirement Board in determining the income tax and this year's hike in automobile assessments levied by the Board of Assessors were attacked yesterday in petitions filed with the District Board of Tax Appeals.

Arthur A. Callahan, a retired employe of the Washington Terminal Co., in his petition asked the District to return $7.52 which he paid in income taxes on a $1,168 pension from the R. R. B. He cited an act of Congress which exempts his pension from "any tax or garnishment."

The Premier Purchasing Co. has attacked the valuation by the Board of Assessors on 54 taxicabs, claiming "the valuation placed on taxicabs for personal tax assessments far exceeds the actual market valuation or trade-in value."

The company states the District assessed the cabs at $640 each, although the "actual market value" was $500 or less. The company claims a refund of $7,560.

The first protest against the District's corporation income tax was filed with the board by Oneida, Lt., Oneida, N. Y. The company stated its representatives "occasionally" travel through the District, but they do not "make contracts or accept orders" for their merchandise. All such business is done in the State of New York, it is stated. The company seeks the return of $216.

City Officials Check Employe Rolls for Aliens

District department heads yesterday began "in earnest" a check on possible aliens employed by the city as directed by the District Appropriation Act, which provides salaries only for United States citizens or those who have declared their intention of becoming citizens.

Many employes have already obtained birth certificates proving their citizenship and foreign born have brought their papers to the District Building.

Administration Leading U. S. Toward War With 'Empty Gun,' Lindbergh Warns Nation

Flier Declares America Can't Turn Tide of Conflict

Following is the text of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's radio address on "Our Drift Toward War."

I have asked to speak to you again tonight because I believe that we, in America, are drifting toward a position of far greater seriousness to our future than even this present war. There is an attempt to becloud the issue that confronts us. It is not alone an issue of building an adequate defense for our country. That must and can be done. Our people are solidly behind an adequate military preparedness, and no one believes in it more than I. But we must not confuse the question of national defense with the question of entering an European war. And it is just as important not to confuse this present war with the type of war we would have to wage if we fought against Germany. Arming for the defense of America is compatible with normal life, commerce and culture. It is an integral part of the destiny of our Nation. But arming to attack the continent of Europe would necessitate that the lives and thoughts of every man, woman and child in this country be directed toward war for the next generation, probably for the next several generations.

We cannot continue for long to follow the course our Government has taken without becoming involved in war with Germany. There are some who already advocate our entry into such a war. There are many perfectly sincere men and women who believe that we can send weapons to kill people in Europe without becoming involved in war with those people. Still others believe that by gestures and applause we can assist France and England to win without danger to our own country. In addition to these, however, there are men among us of less honesty who advocate stepping closer and closer to war, knowing well that a point exists beyond which there can be no turning back. They have baited the trap of war with requests for modest assistance. This latter group is meeting with success at the moment.

"Gestures With an Empty Gun"

There is a saying that grew in the old West to the effect that a man who enjoys life should never touch his gun unless he means business; that he should never draw unless he is ready to shoot, and that he should never shoot unless he is ready to kill. Those old pioneers of ours knew from long experience that there can be no successful dabbling with death. But the red-blooded wisdom of the old West is gone from American politics today. Our present danger results from making gestures with an empty gun after we have already lost the draw. Fortunately, the wide wall of the Atlantic stands between us and the shooting that is going on.

This dabbling we have been doing in European affairs can lead only to failure in the future as it has in the past. It is not a policy that we can continue to follow and remain a great nation.

Let us look at our position today. Our leaders have lost the influence we could have exerted as the world's greatest neutral nation. The driblets of munitions we have sold to England and France have had a negligible effect on the trend of the war, and we have not sufficient military strength available to change that trend. We demand that foreign nations refrain from interfering in our hemisphere, yet we constantly interfere in theirs. And while we have been taking an ineffective part in the war abroad, we have inexcusably neglected our defenses at home. In fact we have let our own affairs drift along until we have not even a plan of defense for the continent of North America. We have been doing to England and France what they did to Abyssinia, to Czecho-Slovakia, to Poland, to Finland, and to Norway—we have encouraged them to hope for help we cannot send. Yet with these examples before us, we still continue in this course—the same course that led England to failure abroad and weakness at home, a course that will lead us, also, to a disastrous and unsuccessful war if we persist in following it.

When the subject of our participation in war is discussed, most people visualize the war that is now going on in Europe. They think of sending more arms, and possibly some soldiers. There is still very little understanding of what our entrance into European war would mean. When we talk of such a war, we must realize that we are considering the greatest struggle the world has yet known—a conflict between hemispheres, one-half of the white race against the other half. Before allowing ourselves to become further involved, we should consider the conditions which may exist by the time we are ready for military action. If we enter war at all, we should prepare to meet the worst conditions rather than the best.

It is useless to talk of sending American troops to Europe now, for we would need months of preparation before we could train and equip even a small army, and small efforts do not effect great movements—witness Norway, Holland and Belgium.

We must face the fact, regardless of how disagreeable it is to us, that before we can take effective action in an European war the German armies may have brought all Europe under their control. In that case, Europe will be dominated by the strongest military nation the world has ever known, controlling a population far larger than our own. If we decide to enter war, we must be prepared to attack that nation. We must prepare to invade a continent which it controls.

Face a Great Decision

No people ever had a greater decision to make. We hold our children's future in our hands as we deliberate, for if we turn to war the battles will be hard fought and the outcome is not likely to be decided in our lifetime. This is a question of mortgaging the lives of our children and our grandchildren. Every family in the land would have its wounded and its dead.

We start at a disadvantage because we are not a military nation. Ours is not a land of guns and marching men. If we decide to fight, then the United States must prepare for war for many years to come, and on a scale unprecedented in all history. In that case we must turn to a dictatorial government, for there is no military efficiency to be lost. We should start to build an army of several million men. We will need several hundred thousand airplanes before the battling is over. And we must have a navy large enough to transport this force across the sea.

This war we are asked to enter would not be a repitition of the last war. It would be more comparable to the struggle which took place between Athens and Sparta, or Rome and Carthage. It would involve the destiny of America and of Western civilization as far into the future as we can see.

But whatever our decision may be in regard to Europe, we must start now to build our own defenses. We must stop these gestures with an empty gun. In this, we are a united nation. The only question that arises concerns how our defense can best be built. We must first construct a clear cut plan of defense, and have the cooperation of all American countries in carrying it out. We must insist upon military bases being placed wherever they are needed for our safety, regardless of who owns the territory involved.

We must be willing to do more than pay taxes and make appropriations. Military strength cannot be purchased by money alone. Strength is a thing of spirit, of preparation, and of sacrifice extending over years of time. The men of our country must be willing to give a year of their lives to military training—more if necessary. And our capitalists as well as our soldiers should be willing to serve without personal profit. We must have a nation ready to give whatever is required for its future welfare, and leaders who are more interested in their country than in their own advancement.

Invasion Impossible

With an adequate defense, no foreign army can invade us. Our advantage in defending America is as great as our disadvantage would be in attacking Europe. From a military geographical standpoint, we are the most fortunate country in the world. There is no other nation in this hemisphere strong enough to even consider attacking us, and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans separate us from the warring armies of Europe and Asia. If the British navy could not support an invasion of Norway against the German air force, there is little reason for us to worry about an invasion of America as long as our own air force is adequately maintained.

As far as invasion by air is concerned, it is impossible for any existing air force to attack effectively across the ocean. In the arctic regions, the severe climate and ruggedness of terrain counteract the vulnerability of shorter distances between land. With our geographical position, nothing but the gross neglect of our military forces, or quarreling between American countries themselves, could make possible an invasion by foreign armies.

America stands today where the road divides, at the signpost of war and peace. Now that we have become one of the world's greatest nations, shall we throw away the independent American destiny which our forefathers gave their lives to win? Shall we submerge our future in the endless wars of the Old World? Or shall we build our own defenses and leave European war to European countries?

Tell Your Congress

Shall we continue this suicidal conflict between western nations and white races, or shall we learn from history as well as from modern Europe that a civilization cannot be preserved by conflict among its own peoples, regardless of how different their ideologies may be?

You men and women of America who believe that our destiny lies in building strength at home and not in war abroad—to you I say that we must act now to stop this trend toward war. An organized minority in this country is flooding our Congress and our press with propaganda for war. They are spending large sums of money in advertisements. They are telegraphing, writing and talking every hour of the day, pushing us closer and closer to the edge. Some are even now demanding a declaration of war.

If you believe that we should not enter an European war, you must support those of us who oppose such action. We cannot stop this trend alone. Some of your Representatives in Washington are already considering a declaration of war, but they are responsible to you for the action they take. Let them know how you feel about this. Speak to your friends and organize in your community. Nothing but a determined effort on the part of every one of us will prevent the disaster toward which our Nation is now heading.

Belgrade Moves Nearer the Axis

Text of Roosevelt Note to Olds

The text of President Roosevelt's letter to Leland Olds, chairman of the Federal Power Commission, on national defense preparedness for the electric power industry follows:

My dear Mr. Olds:

In order that we may have an adequate supply of electric power in the areas in which it is most needed, I would like the Federal Power Commission, utilizing its existing facilities, in cooperation with the National Power Policy Committee and the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense, to undertake the following:

1. To maintain contacts with the War and Navy departments, the Maritime Commission, the Civil Aeronautics Authority, Coast Guard, the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense, and the other Government agencies concerned with national defense orders, to translate their orders and requests into demands for power, and to keep check on the adequacy of the power supply to meet such demands.

2. To maintain contacts with vital national defense industries, to keep currently informed as to their present and prospective needs, to confer with the utilities with respect to supplying such needs in the most dependable and economical manner, and with respect to providing needed interconnections between private industrial generating plants and the utility systems.

3. To maintain contacts with the electrical equipment industry, to keep monthly records of all orders placed for generating equipment, to keep check on existing stocks of transmission and distribution equipment and supplies with a view to maintaining them at an adequate level, and to recommend to the President priorities between orders.

4. To obtain monthly information from the utility industry as to loads so that increased requirements in any area can be anticipated and steps taken to meet them promptly, and to plan, in cooperation with the industry, for the most economical use of existing steam and hydro capacity, curtailment of less essential loads, emergency interconnections between systems, expansion of distribution systems to meet war industry requirements, additional generating capacity and, where utilities are unable or unwilling to undertake necessary construction, to report to the President the need of special arrangements to finance or otherwise further such construction.

5. To work out plans for the protection of power supply against hostile acts, and to this end to cooperate with the utilities and other Government agencies, including the Department of Justice, in protecting generating stations, interconnecting transmission lines, important substations and distribution facilities required to assure power supply to key industrial plants.

All information obtained and plans worked out by the Federal Power Commission, in acting as I have requested, should be recorded in triplicate and copies sent forthwith to the National Power Policy Committee and the advisory commission to the Council of National Defense.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the agencies enumerated above requesting that they give you the fullest cooperation in this very necessary work.

Italy Deprived Of 103 Ships In First Week

10% of Merchant Fleet Either Sunk or Driven Off Sea, Survey Shows

By the Associated Press

Italy, in the first week of her war at sea, apparently lost at least 103 merchant ships—nearly 10 per cent of her total—either scuttled by their crews, sunk in combat, or driven off the seas to seek refuge in neutral ports, an unoffical survey of reports from the combatants disclosed yesterday.

On the other side of the ledger, Italy claims the torpedoing of an Allied cruiser, a 10,000-ton tanker and a French destroyer of 2,441 tons.

Britain, with announced sinkings totaling 92,340 gross tons, saw almost twice as much tonnage of all types of her craft sent to the bottom as did her newest enemy.

Authoritative circles in London, however, said 210,855 tons of Italian merchant shipping had been lost by sinking or capture since June 10.

Lloyd's registry of 1939 lists an Italian merchant marine of 1,235 ships with a total gross tonnage of 3,448,453. In the past six days, at least 103 of these vessels have been reported lost either through sinking or finding idle refuge in neutral harbors.

The British Admiralty reported the loss of ten English ships including: The aircraft carrier Glorious; the former passenger liners Carinthia and Caledonia, converted to armed merchant cruisers, and the Orama, now a troopship; the antiaircraft cruiser Calypso, and two destroyers.

The only Allied loss credited to the Italians was that of the Calypso, torpedoed in the Mediterranean.

Italy admitted the naval loss of only a small, unnamed minesweeper. The British claimed to have fired the 9,000-ton Italian escort vessel San Giorgio and several submarines.

At least 11 Italian merchant ships totaling more than 60,000 gross tons have been reported sunk, including nine vessels scuttled. Another 22,000 gross tons were reported beached to avoid capture.

Seventy Italian merchant ships, many of them tankers carrying valuable oil cargoes, are anchored in neutral ports throughout the world; 20 in or near the Mediterranean; 30 in North and South American ports, 22 around United States coastal waters.

Three of Italy's giant liners, the Rex, Conte Di Savoia and Augustus, were believed to have been pressed into service as troopships.

Italian Ship Attacked

Copyright by New York Times

Panama, Canal Zone, June 15.—The 25,000-ton Italian liner Conte de Biancamano, was attached yesterday by United States Marshal John E. Hushing for a libel account of the East Asiatic Petroleum Co.

The action was based on a debt of $92,000 owed by other vessels of the Lloyd-Treistino line, which owns the Biancamano. The bill is reportedly for fuel supplied the company's ships at Suez.

Villaperosa Attached

Wilmington, N. C., June 15 (AP).—The 3,621-ton Italian freighter Villaperosa, which was loading a cargo of scrap iron here when Italy declared war against the Allies, was attached by a U. S. marshal today in a libel suit by the Asiatic Petroleum Corporation.

The $1,823,000,000 War Department appropriation bill, which President Roosevelt signed Friday, carries funds to provide for active duty for 4,358 temporary officers.

The Army has 103,000 reserve officers. Thousands of them already have filed application for active service.

Other defense developments were:

The Senate Finance Committee unanimously reported a revised $1,007,000,000 tax bill to help finance the national defense program. Chairman Pat Harrison said the bill will be called up tomorrow and predicted it would be passed before next week-end.

The Senate passed a bill to give the Reconstruction Finance Corporation broad powers to finance production of war materials. The measure now goes back to the House for action on minor changes. At the RFC, it was indicated that the first action to be taken under the legislation would be the purchase of reserve stocks of war materials such as rubber, tin and manganese.

The Senate also approved and sent to the White House a bill designed to expedite warship construction. It provides for consolidation of the Navy's bureau of engineering and its bureau of construction in order to cut red tape.

The Navy announced the placing of a $5,489,308 order for airplane engines to the Fairchild Engine and Airplane Corporation.

The Federal Power Commission announced that on instructions from President Roosevelt, it would survey power needs and, in cooperation with other agencies, work out plans to protect the power supply against hostile acts.

Shipping men were reported to have sounded out officials on the question of modifying the Neutrality Act so that American vessels could enter British and French ports.

President Roosevelt signed a bill to throw open Federal arsenals and American shipyards to Latin American republics for construction and purchase of warships and war materiel.

A report from Nome, Alaska, said Russia is building an air field and wireless station on Big Diomede Island, four miles from Little Diomede Island on the international boundary.

Senator Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire, told the Senate that President Roosevelt and Congress should investigate a report that Germany had acquired America's most cherished military secret—the airplane bombsight.

Senator Hill (Democrat), of Alabama, left the Senate chamber to telephone Gen. H. M. Arnold, chief of the Army Air Corps, and returned to inform the Senate:

"Gen. Arnold has advised me that from pictures of the German device, they have a good bomb sight, but that none of the facts show the Germans have our bomb sight."

the Germans out of the foothold they had secured on the French side of the Rhine, 40 miles north of Basel, were reported to have failed.

Great Battle Raging

[The French dynamited a great dam a few miles from Basel, apparently hoping the flood waters would frustrate the German attack across the river, but the Nazis retained their position.

[Details were lacking on the means used by the Germans to span the river, but there was no doubt the Nazi troops had accomplished what military experts heretofore called a "suicidal action."

[The place they chose for the crossing was between the German village of Breisach and the French village of Neuf-Breisach on opposite shores of the Rhine at one of its narrowest points.

(Tonight French and German artillery fired sporadically at forts north of Basel while the sound of incessant firing came from the Breisach region, where a tremendous battle was raging. The French rushed reserves into the action in their attempt to blast the Germans out of their foothold on the west bank.

(Although the Germans apparently captured several minor forts in the Breisach vicinity after forcing a crossing of the Rhine, they remained under heavy fire from the powerful Maginot Line forts before Colmar.)

The French said the armies of Paris fell back "in the best of order."

The German armies of Champagne, seeking to engulf the French and to render the Maginot Line helpless from the rear, were forced to fight one great battle after another.

Tonight these German armies had crossed the Seine at Romilly, some 65 miles southeast of Paris; had increased their pressure between Troyes and St. Dizier, still further east, and had sent advance guards to the region of Chaumont, which is the capital of the Haute-Marne department and lies between the Marne and the Suize.

Chaumont was the location of Gen. John J. Pershing's A. E. F. general headquarters.

In the west, the high command said, the situation was unchanged.

There was violent fighting west of Louviers, a city 25 miles south of the German-taken Rouen.

But it seemed the French were holding this German push toward the rest of the Channel ports. South of Louviers, another battle went on in the region of Evreux.

British Slow Nazi Rush in West

In southwest Germany an attack was made on heavy concentrations of troops and materials in the state of Baden . . . aircraft of the Coastal Command destroyed large supplies of ammunition on the quay at Bergen and returned safely."

British sources said the week of constant withdrawal before terrific German pressure was the "blackest in history" for England and France. They added doggedly: "The fight isn't over yet."

Authoritative London sources said "the Allies continue as hitherto—in close consultation and complete agreement."

Rumors of discord between the Allies were laid to enemy propaganda.

A British statement said:

"The German and Italian propaganda machines have today been more than usually active in the circulation through their innumerable and devious channels of a variety of rumors designed to shake the mutual confidence of the Allied peoples.

"The main thesis, of which there is much variation, is that disagreement exists between the British and French civil and military authorities.

"Stories to this effect have been reproduced in many languages from German and Italian wireless stations. In authoritative London quarters tonight attention was directed to the origin of the rumors, which are completely devoid of foundation."

The flow of troops and supplies from England to France was undiminished.

Light British tanks were hurled against the heavy German "snarlers"—powerful tanks of approximately 85 tons.

Two British tank regiments massed recently in the heaviest of these counterattacks, plowing into German troops for an entire day to steam a Nazi rush for a Somme River bridgehead.

Aid Sent Without Stint

British sources said the new expeditionary force is well equipped, though fitting the force for battle required dipping deep into reserves intended for home defense.

These sources said aid was being given to France as it was promised—at once, and without stint.

England called a new class to the colors, 300,000 men of the age of 28. Another 300,000 men who are 29 will be called June 22. Volunteers were asked for air corps duty—men 18 to 28 for training as pilots, and men 18 to 32 as observers and radio operators.

An Air Ministry communique describing raids last night across the German border said important industrial and communications objectives were hit by bombs at Essen Duren and Cologne.

A terrific explosion was reported after a hit squarely on a blast furnace near Essen. Incendiary and high explosive bombs were dumped on marshalling yards and railway junctions at Cologne, Essen and Duren.

Harold Nicolson, parliamentary secretary of the Ministry of Information, declared tonight that any German interest in the Americas would be prevented from becoming effective "firstly by the British Navy and secondly by the American Navy."

In a broadcast, he called any peace aims of Adolf Hitler "a peace of death" for the Allies and for the countries invaded, and added:

"We shall not pay a shameful price for peace. The honor and safety of the world lies in our hands."

May Arm People

A group of members of Parliament was called to meet next Tuesday to consider "arming the population" against invasion—the spokesman for the move, M. P. Clement Davies, declaring that the people, even women and any boy "who can throw a ball" should be given "hand grenades, bombs, pistols, anything."

Heads of the governments of New Zealand, Australia and the Union of South Africa sent to Premier Reynaud of France pledges to fight on "to the finish" to drive the foes from France.

A Reuters (British news agency) correspondent "Somewhere in France" wrote that "the situation is the most tragic since the Prussians marched into Paris 70 years ago," but commented that "there is complete absence of panic or desperation."

the arrival of Chancellor Hitler.")

We arrived last night in this city that seems dead. I just do not recognize Paris again. Seventy per cent of its population has fled.

From the Hotel Crillon, where once President Wilson of the United States addressed French crowds, the swastika is flying.

The banner also is flying from atop the Quai d'Orsay (the French Foreign Office); from the Arc de Triomphe, under which lies buried France's Unknown Soldier of the World War; from the historic City Hall, and from the Eiffel Tower.

It all seems unreal, like an Arabian Nights Tale come to life.

St. Germain Afire

On first entering Paris last night, we drove to the tomb of the Unknown Soldier in the twilight.

As a background to the Arc de Triomphe, the sky was disfigured by an enormous ugly cloud of smoke emanating from the region around St. Germain.

That suburb apparently was in flames from artillery fire.

It was about 9 p. m.—and the Arc was bathed in a mellow, reddish light.

Before the tomb of "Un Soldat Inconnau" were standing old women, young women, bearded old men and boys in their teens. Many of the older women were sobbing softly.

Never could one forget that deeply touching scene.

As we approached the tomb in company of our guides from the army their looks hardened for a moment. They appeared to relax somewhat, however, when the German officers removed their caps, stood still, then saluted the symbol of the brave French soldiery buried there.

A Ghost City

To countless American tourists who know Paris it is probably as incomprehensible as it was to me that the old Paris was a ghost city when I entered.

We came by way of the Clichy gate. No Germans were visible anywhere along our drive through this section.

Such few citizens as stood around at corners or gathered about radio loud speakers gazed at us in curiosity.

They apparently had not seen any German officers before.

It is an open question whether Adolf Hitler will duplicate his Warsaw performance, when in October, 1939, only two days after capitulation of the Polish capital, he reviewed a gigantic parade of his forces.

In one way or another, however, he is bound to come soon to Paris for the first visit of his life.

For not since 1871 has Germany experienced a triumph similar to that achieved with the occupation of the French capital. In 1871 at Versailles, the German empire was founded and Wilhelm the First proclaimed emperor.

It is almost unthinkable that Hitler would not visit the city soon.

Under arrangements made by Prof. Karl Boemer, chief of the foreign press department of the ministry of propaganda in Berlin—incidentally, a man who has traveled up and down the United States and Mexico and knows America well—we foreign newsmen reached the French capital on the same day the first German troops did.

First to Arrive

Vanguards of the German army had reached the city on Friday at 7 a. m.

At their head was a former member of the Austrian cabinet, Gen. Glaise-Horstenau, who generally is credited with having made the Nazis' entry into Vienna possible.

In fact, we correspondents arrived even ahead of the officer appointed commandant for the occupied capital.

That meant no regulatoins had yet been issued for the conduct of citizens, for the hour of their retirement in the evening, or for a division of powers between local authorities and the occupation forces.

These regulations invariably appeared on public bulletin boards in such Polish, Danish, Dutch, Belgian and northern French cities as I have visited since the outbreak of the war.

In Paris these posters are missing at present.

So at street corners the French police stood about rather uncertain just where they fitted into the picture.

The familiar cries of Parisian newspaper vendors, which in normal times simply belong to Parisian life as an essential component, are missing.

Only One Cafe Open

Along the Champs Elysees only one cafe was open—all else was deadly silent.

Other avenues radiating from the Place de la Concorde, which normally are crowded with people sipping their aperitifs, were dead.

At the busy Place de L'Opera I counted exactly 11 persons, two of them policemen.

Many of the city's most popular hotels were closed.

The Scribe Hotel was requisitioned and we found clean rooms and beds there but almost no personnel to look after us.

The kitchen was closed so we had to stroll over to the Ritz. Here the restaurant manager tried to beg off from serving our party of 30—officials of the high command, propaganda ministry, foreign office, nine foreign correspondents of whom three were Americans, and seven chauffeurs.

No Damage Discovered

A preliminary tour of the main sights of beautiful Paris indicated that no damage has been done anywhere.

I visited the Louvre, Notre Dame Cathedral, the Invalides, the Quai d'Orsay, the Place de la Concorde, the Museum, the Chamber of Deputies, Place Vendome, City Hall and the Sarah Bernhardt Theater—nowhere any damage.

From the American Embassy the Stars and Stripes were displayed.

Object of much feminine curiosity were air force soldiers stationed before antiaircraft guns at strategic points.

Paris was quite another city when the fountains at the Place de la Concorde were not playing, when taxi drivers were not honking, when book stalls were not doing business as usual along the Seine, when all business life was at a standstill.

We approached Paris from the east via Amiens, Saint-Just, Clermont, Creil and LeBourget. Then detouring to Saint Denis.

Russia Gets Turks to Stay Out of War

Ankara Announces She'll Retain Status Of Nonbelligerency

By the Associated Press

Ankara, Turkey, June 15.—The government informed all foreign envoys tonight that Turkey's foreign policy remains unchanged and that for the present she will continue her nonbelligerent status.

The notice was given, informed sources said, after Russia made known to Ankara that she would prefer that Turkey not enter the war on the grounds that extension of the war to the Balkans was "undesirable."

The Russian expression was accepted here as evidence of a definite understanding among Germany, Italy and Russia regarding the Balkans.

Allied Pact Continues

Turkey has a pact with Britain and France to go to war at their side in the event of an act of aggression in the Mediterranean area, but it includes a provision excusing her from fighting Russia.

Though continuing her pact with the Allies, Turkey is expected now to turn toward Russia for political support.

Premier Refik Saydam will make a public statement before Parliament, possibly next week, on Turkey's attitude.

With her communication lines to Britain and France severed by Italy's entrance into the war, Turkey is about to conclude additional trade agreements with Germany. Under them the Reich obtains a number of products, including chromium used in the manufacture of munitions, which hitherto has gone to the Allies.

This arrangement is necessary, it is said, to prevent Turkey from being cut off from all foreign trade.

Carol Urges Neutrality

Bucharest, June 15 (AP).—King Carol of Rumania has dispatched a note to President Ismet Inonu of Turkey asking that Turkey maintain neutrality in order to prevent the war from spreading to the Balkans, diplomatic circles reported today.

Though a Rumanian government spokesman categorically denied dispatch of the note, reports persisted that King Carol's appeal was transmitted through the Rumanian Minister at Ankara.

The same reports said the monarch simultaneously had sent a note to Prince Paul, regent of Yugoslavia, making a similar plea.

Salvador, El Salvador, June 15.—University students staged a demonstration here today in favor of France, and marched to the French Legation, where their speaker condemned the conquests of Germany and Italy.

THIS advertisement is, perhaps, the most startling real estate announcement ever written in the Washington residence area! You who have dreamed a thousand times of YOUR OWN HOME nestled in foothills of beautiful country close to the city must pause for a few minutes to read every word on these two pages. For never before and MAYBE NEVER AGAIN will you have an opportunity like this.

The phenomenal success of the Mace organization in Arlington Co., Virginia—first with Glebewood where 105 happy families live, breathe and have their being in peace and contentment; then Westmont—a community of 98 families whose eyes are to the future and whose civic pride is reflected in the growing beauty of their homes; then Westover, where Washington workers have found the solution to comfortable living in 152 airy, cheerful and modern apartment units, and more lately Highlands, where TODAY happy housewives are hanging curtains and building homes of permanence and security in 100 spic and span houses in this NEW Mace development—we say this phenomenal success commands, not only your respect, but your serious attention.

WHAT A GOOD HOME IS

Frankly now, is not a HOME a shelter, for you and your family, where the greatest amount of continued happiness can be realized? That's Westover Hills!

THE FOUR FUNDAMENTAL POINTS

Should not a HOME be a well arranged, attractive house, strongly built of permanent materials, thoroughly equipped for comfort and convenience and located on a good lot in a good community? That's Westover Hills!

Now, of these four fundamental points you must agree with us that equal consideration must be given to its ARCHITECTURE, CONSTRUCTION, MECHANICAL and COMMUNITY value.

ARCHITECTURAL VALUE

The architectural value of a livable home must be reflected in the size, shape and arrangement of rooms to best ACCOMMODATE ALL members of the family in all its functions; it must be evaluated by the beauty of BOTH exterior and interior design and with light, ventilation and outlook given ample consideration.

CONSTRUCTION VALUE

The maintenance and upkeep of the HOME today must bear much weight in the mind of the builder. Materials must be used in construction that will reduce depreciation! These are STEEL, CONCRETE and BRICK and concrete porch floors.

MECHANICAL VALUE

No modern HOME can today be conscientiously accepted by a purchaser unless it is properly insulated; no home is of permanent value unless the piping is of copper, the kitchen equipment is of steel and the heating plant of latest design and installation. But ventilation in the construction of a home in the Washington area is of PRIMARY importance.

COMMUNITY VALUE

Are there close-by schools in Westover Hills? Within five minutes' walk your child is within the most beautiful HIGH SCHOOL building in Arlington County! Or the same distance, almost, from beautiful Walter Reed Grammar School! Churches? Already plans are under way for the erection of both Protestant and Catholic houses of worship! Westover Hills will boast a community shopping center never equalled in new, modern community development!

Traffic Probe By Congress Held Needless

Two Studies Already Authorized, Whitehurst Tells D. C. Committee

There is no need of any investigation of District traffic conditions beyond the two studies already authorized, Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, highway director, yesterday informed Chairman Jennings Randolph, of the House District Committee.

Randolph made public a letter from the District official expressing the view that, with one survey under way and another soon to begin, a special Congressional study would be unnnecessary.

Representative Thomas D'Alesandro (Democrat), of Maryland, a member of the House District Committee, recently recommended appointment by Speaker Bankhead of a five-man group to conduct a special survey of Capital traffic.

"The highway department, together with the office of the Director of Vehicles and Traffic, is now conducting, through authority of the Federal Aid Act, a highway planning survey in cooperation with the Public Road Administration," said Capt. Whitehurst.

"Similar surveys have been undertaken in 46 of the 48 States. This survey will be complete and will take in the entire field of traffic activity, including to some extent the gathering of data with reference to the parking problem."

In addition, he informed Randolph, the 1941 District suppy bill provides for a study of off-street parking facilities.

"I would say that these two surveys, taken together, will cover the entire field," the District highway director said. "Upon the completion of the surveys, it is hoped that we will be in a position to draw very definite conclusions as to highway improvements and what changes in traffic regulation are most desirable."

He also called Randolph's attention to a District traffic study made by a House subcommittee in 1936, explaining that the committee's report made "many valuable recommendations," some of which were carried into effect.

"The use of this report would probably obviate the necessity for other hearings on this matter," Capt. Whitehurst said.

Largest Stone Ever Quarried Under Gen. Scott

If the District begins to move the statue at Scott Circle for the underpass they will find at the base of the figure a solid piece of stone believed to be the largest single piece ever quarried.

Director of Highways H. C. Whitehurst said yesterday he had to go as far back as 1873 for the chief of engineers report which provided a complete description of the figure. The base of the statue weighs 119 tons, and because it is in one piece will offer little difficulty when moving day comes.

"What I want to know," Capt. Whitehurst said, "is how they ever got that piece of stone down here from Massachusetts in 1875 when the monument was erected."

Hull Reveals Investigation Of Italian Consular Officers

Action to check the movements of aliens in the United States was taken on two fronts by the Government yesterday as follows:

Secretary of State Hull disclosed the Government was investigating reports of activities of Italian consular agencies.

The Senate, by a voice vote, passed legislation requiring fingerprinting of all aliens and providing for deportations not now permitted under immigration laws.

Hull made his announcement when he was questioned at his press conference about the protest Friday of Prince Colonna, Italian Ambassador, against reports of pro-Fascist activity of the Italian consular agents in the United States.

Hull did not say what Government agency is investigating consular activities, but it was understood at the State Department that the matter has been turned over to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The fingerprinting bill, which originated in the House, was amended by the Senate to strengthen penalties against aliens who fail to register. It goes back to the House for concurrence in this amendment.

Strict penalties—a maximum of $10,000 fine and 10 years imprisonment—are provided for advocating insubordination, disloyalty or mutiny by any member of the military or naval establishments.

Government ears, attuned to reports of "fifth column" activities in the South and Central American republics, got cheering word yesterday from Brazil.

This came in a cable from President Vargas to the Brazilian Embassy, for transmission to the State Department, assuring the United States of Brazil's loyalty to the United States policies in the Western Hemisphere.

The cable was prompted by criticism in this country of Vargas' speech from a warship on Brazil June 11, which was interpreted in many quarters here as criticizing the democracies and leaning to Nazi-fascism.

"Speech delivered June 11 can in no sense be regarded as contradictory to that of President Roosevelt (the President's Charlottesville speech of June 10), which speech I had not read at that time," the Vargas message said.

"My speech is a warning, a call to reality, addressed to Brazilians and which might cause surprise only to persons devoted to routine, not to a far-seeing mind like that of Roosevelt, who is liberal-minded, progressive and forward-looking, crying out as the voice of the whole continent regarding perils which threaten America, and who knows that Brazil will not fail him in loyalty."

No reply to the message had been announced last night.

Chicagoan Is Named Federal Parole Chief

Walter K. Urich, Chicago, has been appointed parole executive of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, the Department of Justice announced yesterday. Urich succeeds Myrl E. Alexander, who has been named junior associate warden of the Federal Penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa.

Urich will administer the work of 94 parole officers who supervise 15,000 parolees in the Nation.

Surging Water From Broken Main Threatens Home

distressing inconvenience, at the worst.

Providence, Children's and Georgetown hospitals were without water for a time. At the latter institution several operations had to be postponed. Children's Hospital appealed to the Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase Dairy to furnish a truckload of drinking water, which was being delivered in milk cans when service was restored.

Mr. and Mrs. William Pennefield were in the front yard of their home at 1306 Foxhall road, about 50 feet from the conduit break.

"I heard a noise like a big cannon going off," said Mrs. Jennifield. "I saw water spouting as high as a flood of water poured down the slope toward the Wintermyers' home. It looked as if it would be washed away."

Mrs. Thomas Wintermyer, 1300 Foxhall road, who was in the kitchen of her home, knew nothing of the blowup, however, until she was warned by Mrs. Mary Walker, of Forestville, Va., a house guest. The Wintermyer home was surrounded by water.

Mrs. Walker made her way out of the house unaided, but two men rushed in and carried Mrs. Wintermyer to dry ground. The Wintermyer children, 5-year-old Jimmy and Peggy, 7, were on their way home from a grocery when the break occurred.

Pennifield said:

"The break made a noise like the explosion of a bomb going off underground. I saw big chunks of asphalt and concrete flying high in the air."

Thirty million gallons of water pour daily through the conduit. At the scene of the break water gushed forth in such volume as to flood Canal road to a 2-foot depth for nearly a mile.

The greater part of the stampeding stream rushed east along Canal road and poured over the north side of the overpass near the intersection of Canal and Foxhall roads.

A telephone pole was left dangling crazily from its overhead wires when the earth in which it stood was washed away by the flood. A 40-foot tree was leveled.

Engineers hoped to determine the cause of the break from a study of the broken pipe. They suggested that the ground under the main might have settled and placed a lateral strain on the brittle cast iron, which proved unequal to the additional pressure.

Or, they speculated, some hidden flaw in the pipe may have caused it to yield under increasing pressure. The main had served the District for half a century without ever giving any major trouble.

Fire officials breathed a sigh of relief when service was restored without an alarm having been turned in during the cut-off period. Special orders were issued to fire companies in affected areas to use precautions in pumping water, due to low pressure conditions.

In event of a total breakdown, it would have been possible to pump water from the Potomac River, the reservoirs or any other source of water within 2 miles of the blaze, they asserted.

Three years ago, it was recalled, a similar break in the Northeast section caused such a shortage that mobile tanks furnished by the Water Department were placed at the engine houses in the affected areas.

Casualty, Columbia, Episcopal and Walter Reed hospitals reported their water pressure fell during the emergency but caused no serious inconvenience. Doctors Hospital suffered a total shutoff but got by with its 20,000-gallon reserve tank.

On Capitol Hill the air conditioning went out of commission while the Senate was in session and for several hours no drinking water was available on the upper floors. At George Washington University Hospital the fourth floor was waterless but service was not affected below that level.

Water rushing over an overpass on Canal road 50 yards east of the main break washed away tons of earth on the north side of the overpass and threatened a gas main located there. The stream was diverted into the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, however, thus saving the gas main which services a large section of the Northwest.

Red Cross Sets 'Goal-to-Go' Meeting Today

Rally to Be Held At Eight Tonight For War Relief Fund

On the even of a "goal-to-go" mass meeting aimed to carry the District Red Cross war relief drive over the $300,000 quota, Washington contributions fell off sharply yesterday. Receipts for the day of $2,841 brought the total to $245,238.

Cross officials called the rally, to be held at 8 p. m. today in Labor Department auditorium, in an effort to bring home to Washingtonians realization of urgent needs of several million refugees fleeing Nazi legions in France.

Presiding at the meeting, for which there is no admission charge and where there will be no solicitation of funds, will be Brig. Gen. Frank M. Keefer, U. S. A., retired, chairman of the District chapter.

Clifton Fadiman to Speak

Following an invocation by the Rev. Charles T. Warner, pastor of St. Alban's Episcopal Church, Courtland Ferguson, master of ceremonies, will introduce speakers including National Chairman Norman H. Davis, Clifton Fadiman, literary critic of the New Yorker magazine, and Bruce Baird, president of the National Savings & Trust Co. and chairman of the local war relief drive.

Special guests of honor at the rally include Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull.

Gene Archer, radio singer, will lead the audience in the singing of "God Save America" and, at the conclusion of the meeting, in "The Star-Spangled Banner."

McKeesport Sails

As the S. S. McKeesport, first Red Cross "mercy ship" sailed yesterday with a $1,000,000 cargo of food, medical supplies, and ambulances for France, two additional vessels, the S. S. Executive and the S. S. Narbo, will begin loading similar cargoes at New York June 25. Last minute sailing orders sent the McKeesport to Bilbao, Spain, instead of Bordeaux, France, because of the spread of war in stricken France.

Sailing of the mercy ship was delayed more than two hours when the crew, members of the National Maritime Union, a C. I. O. affiliate, learned the destination had been changed from Bordeaux to Bilbao. After a conference with the ship's officers, however, the crew agreed to sail and, in effect, to donate a month's pay to the Red Cross.

The dispute came over a clause in the union's contract which requires that, when the vessel's destination is changed, the crew must be paid for the first voyage as if they had made it. The crew agreed to waive this clause, since the voyage was for the Red Cross.

Ending a week-long campaign for funds, District public schools, in which soliciting of contributions has been allowed by a special school board waiver, sent $525 to Red Cross headquarters to be used for relief of children refugees.

From booths and stores $625 was received. Other gifts were as follows:

Mrs. Truxton Beale, $400 (second contribution); Sanitary Grocery employes, $741.25.

Government contributions, because of the Saturday holiday, were small. They included:

U. S. Housing Authority, $42.25; D. C. Public Library, $40; War Department, $45; Civil Aeronautics, $6; Walter Reed Hospital, $19.45; National Labor Relations Board, $203.15.

Siam's Envoy Denies Treaties Menace Japan

Pacts With Allies Are Peaceful in Aim, New Minister Says

M. R. Seni Pramoj, newly arrived Minister from Thailand to the United States, said yesterday that Japanese suspicions of his country's nonaggression treaty with France and Britain are altogether unwarranted.

Thailand (the native atnd official name of Siam) is strictly neutral toward all powers in the war, Pramoj declared, and the nonaggression pact is an instrument of the country's peace policy.

Matter of Geography

"Our only aim is peace," said Pramoj, "and we hope that the new treaty will be a contribution toward that end. That Thailand should enter a nonaggression agreement with France and Britain was natural because we are neighbors; there are British and French possessions close to Thailand. But as to similar treaties with Japan, or Italy, or Germany, geography does not indicate such negotiations."

Pramoj said he felt that he came among friends when he landed at San Francisco this week, visiting America for the first time as his country's highest officer here.

"Friendship with the United States is a national tradition in Thailand," he explained. "Now that we have attained complete autonomy, you may be sure that we shall treasure and foster our amity with this great country.

Learned From West

"We have learned much from America and Europe. In restating our law (a task in which Pramoj took part as a judge of the Bangkok Imperial Court and a member of the National Judicial Council which drafts legislation) we have adapted western jurisprudence to our own needs.

"We have retained our own laws governing family and personal relations; but we have drawn upon the continental codes for statutes governing contracts and upon Anglo-American law for our commercial principles, such as the law of negotiable instruments."

The new minister, only 36, studied three years at Oxford University. But he is rapidly picking up American terms for after only a week here, yesterday he referred to his 5 and 7 year old sons as "the kiddies."

C. A. Martin, China Dealer, Dies on Train

Nephew of Sherman Was Returning Here From Mother's Burial

En route here from Ashland, Ohio, where he had attended the burial of his mother on Friday, Carl A. Martin, 55, president of Martin's china and glassware store, died yesterday.

Mr. Martin, a great nephew of Gen. Sherman of the Civil War, succumbed of a heart attack on a train. His mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Martin, died Thursday.

A native of Ashland, Mr. Martin came here in 1925 to found the glassware establishment at 1223 Connecticut avenue northwest.

Active in civic circles here, he was for many years a member of the Connecticut Avenue Businessmen's Association and served as its president three years ago.

Mr. Martin leaves his wife, Mrs. Pearl Holden Martin, with whom he lived at 2737 Devonshire place northwest; a brother, Frank S. Martin, of Charles Town, W. Va., and Mrs. Charles Stokes, of Ypsilanti, Mich.

Funeral rites will be at 3 p. m. tomorrow at Gawler's funeral home, 1756 Pennsylvania avenue northwest. Services will be held Tuesday in Cleveland.

Rumania Pays On War Debt, Asks Parley

Finland Presents Check as Moratorium Is Granted to Her

Two war debt payments were made to the United States Treasury yesterday, one of them a surprise and the other, one that America has been taught to expect but didn't want to accept.

Rumania made a surprise move for an amended war debt agreement by handing the Treasury a check for $100,000 as a conditioned, token payment on that nation's $1,386,870 obligation.

Finland's minister, Hjalmar J. Procope, handed Assistant Treasury Secretary Herber E. Gaston his government's check for $159,398, in payment of the installment due yesterday.

The Finnish payment came just before President Roosevelt signed legislation granting Finland a ten-year moratorium on her debt. The resolution had been rushed through Congress Friday as a gesture of American appreciation of Finland's action, even in the midst of her present task of reconstruction, in living up to her promises to pay.

"As things stand and under existing conditions," Procope told Gaston, "I have to hand you this check." The minister said, however, he would inform his government of the moratorium legislation which Procope noted with "deep gratitude."

The Rumanian move was made by Minister Radu Irimescu in a letter to Secretary Hull.

To Be Set Aside

The letter stated that the money was being paid as a token of Rumania's desire to settle her obligations to the United States, and asked that it be held in a special account, to be applied to the debt when and if a new agreement on the obligation has been reached.

The Treasury announced that the money would be so held and asked Secretary Hull to notify the Rumanian envoy that the Treasury is giving consideration to the suggestion for a new agreement.

Hungary Follows Suit

The Hungarian government paid $9,828 on account of its debt installment of $37,410 due this June 15, and $597,370 past due and in default. The Hungarian payment also was made conditional upon acceptance by the United tates of a new debt agreement proposed by Hungary a year ago.

Fingerprint All, D. C. Rainbow Veterans Urge

Col. Davis Arnold Elected President Of Organization

The District chapter of the Rainbow Division Veterans last night urged immediate registration and fingerprinting of all individuals in the United States, citizens and aliens.

The resolution, introduced by E. Claude Babcock, stated that innocent persons have nothing to fear from this procedure, which is made necessary by the emergency conditions which now exist.

Col. Davis G. Arnold was elected president of the chapter, and, with the other newly-elected officers, he was installed by National President Elmer Francis Neagle.

James E. Witherite was named honorary president; John W. Shiles, Paul G. Demonet and Joseph M. Cohan, vice presidents; Bentley Mulford, secretary; Irving H. Silverberg, treasurer; the Rt. Rev. Arlington A. McCallum, chaplain; and John H. DuBey, sergeant-at-arms.

The delegation to the national convention July 12 to 14 in Montgomery, Ala., will be headed by Witherite. Other delegates include Dr. Albert M. Klaczeskie, Col. Arnold, William H. Kay, Bernard V. Rhodes, Maj. McCallum, Mulford and Cohan.

Memorial services for the heroic dead of the division were conducted by Maj. McCallum, assisted by Frank E. Hill. The meeting was held at the Capitol Park Hotel.

Mrs. Reba Blundy, Wife of Naval Man, Is Dead

Mrs. Reba Kathleen Blundy, 28, of 2136 G street northwest, died yesterday at 11 a. m., at Providence Hospital. The funeral will be held Wednesday afternoon at Marion, Va., Mrs. Blundy's birthplace.

She is survived by her husband, John E. Blundy, chief radioman at the Naval Research Laboratory here; an infant son, Robert Eugene Blundy, born June 8; and the following relatives: her mother, Mrs. Emma Cassell; three brothers, James, Treman and Willie Cassell, and a sister, Miss Lena Cassell.

Mrs. Blundy came here with her husband a year ago from Long Beach, Calif. They were married Jan. 7, 1932, at Fairfax, Va.

Copenhagen, June 15.—The first transport of Danish unemployed workers who enlisted for jobs in Germany left Denmark today. Some 2,400 "volunteered" in all.

Frater Murphy Returns to Sing First High Mass

A young Washington priest will return to his boyhood parish today to sing his first solemn high mass since ordination.

FR. MURPHY

He is the Rev. John Kingston Murphy, O.F.M., son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Murphy, 2529 Eleventh street northwest, who will celebrate mass at 11 a. m. at St. Paul's Catholic Church, Fifteenth and V streets northwest, of which he is a former member.

Assisting in the ceremonies will be the Rev. Edmund J. Fontaine, archpriest; the Rev. Gabriel Naughten, O.F.M., professor at St. Joseph's Seminary, Gallicoon, N. Y., a cousin, as deacon; Frater Joseph Parent, O.F.M., subdeacon, and the Rev. John Burns, St. Paul's assistant, master of ceremonies. Frater Murphy's brothers, John and Richard, will serve as acolytes, and his brother, Joseph, as torch-bearer.

One of four ordained last Tuesday, Frater Murphy will enter the mission field either in America or Palestine at the completion of his studies.

German Consul Blames Reporter In Threat Furor

New Orleans, June 15 (AP).—Nazi Germany's general consul in the South declared today that he was misquoted in a newspaper interview which made it seems that he was threatening the United States with trade reprisals because of American aid to the Allies.

Barn Edgar von Spiegel, in a statement today, denied that he made several of the statements attributed to him in an interview in the New Orleans States yesterday, and charged in addition that the reporter who wrote the story violated his confidence.

Von Spiegel yesterday said he had not been talking for publication on certain points but at that time did not deny making the statements.

Biddle's Aunt Dies

Philadelphia, June 15.—Mrs. Mary Hosack Rodgers Biddle, 92, an aunt of United States Solicitor General Francis Biddle, died today at her home here. She had been in failing health since fracturing her hip three years ago.

D. C. Pastor Sees End of Religion In Axis Victory

Baltimore, June 15 (AP).—The Rev. Dr. Rufus W. Weaver, of Washington, chairman of the committee on public relations, told the Southern Baptist Convention today that a victory for Germany and Italy in Europe's war would mean "destruction" of religious liberty.

Business sessions of the week-long convention ended today, and the conference will be concluded with special church services tomorrow.

"The war now reaching its crisis in Europe is religious rather than political, because the basic issue is continuance of religious liberty. A totalitarian victory means its destruction," the speaker declared.

Dr. Weaver resigned his chairmanship and E. Hilton Jackson, of Washington, was named to head the public relations committee.

The convention appointed a committee to appear before the Social Security Board in Washington with instructions to protest a proposed security act amendment that would tax churches, schools, orphanages, missionary, benevolent and other church boards to provide benefits for employes other than ministers and those in church orders.

Dr. Eben Hill, 58, Ray Expert, Dies

Fitchburg, Mass., June 15 (AP).—Dr. Eben C. Hill, 58, of Temple, N. H., widely known roentgenologist and retired captain in the United States Army, died today at Burbank Hospital after a long illness.

A native of Baltimore and a graduate of Johns Hopkins University he studied medical research in Germany and was graduated from the Army Medical School.

He leaves a widow and two brothers, General John Hill, of Washington, and Bancroft Hill, of Baltimore.

Martin A. Roberts, Library Employe, Dies in Baltimore

Mr. Roberts joined the library staff in 1903 as an assistant in the chief clerk's office. He was successively chief of the orders division and superintendent of the reading room before becoming chief assistant librarian. He lived in Baltimore, commuting daily to his office here.

Born in western Pennsylvania, youngest of six children, he was a graduate of Johns Hopkins University. Two brothers and a sister survive.

Two Parked Cars Looted Here; $95 And Clothes Taken

Thieves yesterday looted two parked cars here, escaping with $95, clothes and jewelry.

Former Judge Louis C. Barley, of Alexandria, reported to police here that his car was ransacked outside of Garfield Hospital, Tenth street and Florida avenue northwest, while he and two friends, Miss Betty Rogers, of the All States Hotel, and Miss Elizabeth Winslow, of the Evangeline Hotel, were visiting the hospital. The women lost three handbags full of clothes, they reported.

George de Bord, serologist for the District Health Department, and his wife, Sara, of 5336 Colorado avenue northwest, told police $15 in cash, $80 in travelers checks, two Government checks and a gold watch were taken from their car parked outside the East Potomac swimming pool.

Editor Asks Nazis About Wodehouse

Philadelphia, June 15 (AP).—Wesley Stout, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, said today he had signed an appeal to the German Charge d'Affaires at Washington to seek the release or whereabouts of P. G. Wodehouse, British author.

Wodehouse was last reported at Le Touquet, France, where he has lived for several years. Nothing has been heard from him since the German occupation of that section.

"The petition pointed out that Wodehouse is around 60 years of age and has never been active in politics," Stout said.

Stout added that Nelson Doubleday and Paul Reynolds, of New York, also had signed the petition.

Red Cross Sets 'Goal-to-Go' Meeting Today

Rally to Be Held At Eight Tonight For War Relief Fund

On the even of a "goal-to-go" mass meeting aimed to carry the District Red Cross war relief drive over the $300,000 quota, Washington contributions fell off sharply yesterday. Receipts for the day of $2,841 brought the total to $245,238.

Cross officials called the rally, to be held at 8 p. m. today in Labor Department auditorium, in an effort to bring home to Washingtonians realization of urgent needs of several million refugees fleeing Nazi legions in France.

Presiding at the meeting, for which there is no admission charge and where there will be no solicitation of funds, will be Brig. Gen. Frank M. Keefer, U. S. A., retired, chairman of the District chapter.

Clifton Fadiman to Speak

Following an invocation by the Rev. Charles T. Warner, pastor of St. Alban's Episcopal Church, Courtland Ferguson, master of ceremonies, will introduce speakers including National Chairman Norman H. Davis, Clifton Fadiman, literary critic of the New Yorker magazine, and Bruce Baird, president of the National Savings & Trust Co. and chairman of the local war relief drive.

Special guests of honor at the rally include Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull.

Gene Archer, radio singer, will lead the audience in the singing of "God Save America" and, at the conclusion of the meeting, in "The Star-Spangled Banner."

McKeesport Sails

As the S. S. McKeesport, first Red Cross "mercy ship" sailed yesterday with a $1,000,000 cargo of food, medical supplies, and ambulances for France, two additional vessels, the S. S. Executive and the S. S. Narbo, will begin loading similar cargoes at New York June 25. Last minute sailing orders sent the McKeesport to Bilbao, Spain, instead of Bordeaux, France, because of the spread of war in stricken France.

Sailing of the mercy ship was delayed more than two hours when the crew, members of the National Maritime Union, a C. I. O. affiliate, learned the destination had been changed from Bordeaux to Bilbao. After a conference with the ship's officers, however, the crew agreed to sail and, in effect, to donate a month's pay to the Red Cross.

The dispute came over a clause in the union's contract which requires that, when the vessel's destination is changed, the crew must be paid for the first voyage as if they had made it. The crew agreed to waive this clause, since the voyage was for the Red Cross.

Ending a week-long campaign for funds, District public schools, in which soliciting of contributions has been allowed by a special school board waiver, sent $525 to Red Cross headquarters to be used for relief of children refugees.

From booths and stores $625 was received. Other gifts were as follows:

Mrs. Truxton Beale, $400 (second contribution); Sanitary Grocery employes, $741.25.

Government contributions, because of the Saturday holiday, were small. They included:

U. S. Housing Authority, $42.25; D. C. Public Library, $40; War Department, $45; Civil Aeronautics, $6; Walter Reed Hospital, $19.45; National Labor Relations Board, $203.15.

They began by selling flowers for a penny each, and after the flowers ran out a lemonade stand was opened. Receipts totaled $10. Among the children who worked out the idea were Alvin and Joan Ostrow, Betty and Buddy Tastet, Robert and Virginia Wilner, Helen and Arlene Walker, Jean Howenstein, Joan Robinson and Joan Rae

Frater Murphy Returns to Sing First High Mass

A young Washington priest will return to his boyhood parish today to sing his first solemn high mass since ordination.

FR. MURPHY

He is the Rev. John Kingston Murphy, O.F.M., son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Murphy, 2529 Eleventh street northwest, who will celebrate mass at 11 a. m. at St. Paul's Catholic Church, Fifteenth and V streets northwest, of which he is a former member.

Assisting in the ceremonies will be the Rev. Edmund J. Fontaine, archpriest; the Rev. Gabriel Naughten, O.F.M., professor at St. Joseph's Seminary, Gallicoon, N. Y., a cousin, as deacon; Frater Joseph Parent, O.F.M., subdeacon, and the Rev. John Burns, St. Paul's assistant, master of ceremonies. Frater Murphy's brothers, John and Richard, will serve as acolytes, and his brother, Joseph, as torch-bearer.

One of four ordained last Tuesday, Frater Murphy will enter the mission field either in America or Palestine at the completion of his studies.

German Consul Blames Reporter In Threat Furor

New Orleans, June 15 (AP).—Nazi Germany's general consul in the South declared today that he was misquoted in a newspaper interview which made it seems that he was threatening the United States with trade reprisals because of American aid to the Allies.

Baron Edgar von Spiegel, in a statement today, denied that he made several of the statements attributed to him in an interview in the New Orleans States yesterday, and charged in addition that the reporter who wrote the story violated his confidence.

Von Spiegel yesterday said he had not been talking for publication on certain points but at that time did not deny making the statements.

Biddle's Aunt Dies

Philadelphia, June 15.—Mrs. Mary Hosack Rodgers Biddle, 92, an aunt of United States Solicitor General Francis Biddle, died today at her home here. She had been in failing health since fracturing her hip three years ago.

Rumania Pays On War Debt, Asks Parley

Finland Presents Check as Moratorium Is Granted to Her

Two war debt payments were made to the United States Treasury yesterday, one of them a surprise and the other, one that America has been taught to expect but didn't want to accept.

Rumania made a surprise move for an amended war debt agreement by handing the Treasury a check for $100,000 as a conditioned, token payment on that nation's $1,386,870 obligation.

Finland's minister, Hjalmar J. Procope, handed Assistant Treasury Secretary Herber E. Gaston his government's check for $159,398, in payment of the installment due yesterday.

The Finnish payment came just before President Roosevelt signed legislation granting Finland a ten-year moratorium on her debt. The resolution had been rushed through Congress Friday as a gesture of American appreciation of Finland's action, even in the midst of her present task of reconstruction, in living up to her promises to pay.

"As things stand and under existing conditions," Procope told Gaston, "I have to hand you this check." The minister said, however, he would inform his government of the moratorium legislation which Procope noted with "deep gratitude."

The Rumanian move was made by Minister Radu Irimescu in a letter to Secretary Hull.

To Be Set Aside

The letter stated that the money was being paid as a token of Rumania's desire to settle her obligations to the United States, and asked that it be held in a special account, to be applied to the debt when and if a new agreement on the obligation has been reached.

The Treasury announced that the money would be so held and asked Secretary Hull to notify the Rumanian envoy that the Treasury is giving consideration to the suggestion for a new agreement.

Hungary Follows Suit

The Hungarian government paid $9,828 on account of its debt installment of $37,410 due this June 15, and $597,370 past due and in default. The Hungarian payment also was made conditional upon acceptance by the United tates of a new debt agreement proposed by Hungary a year ago.

D. C. Pastor Sees End of Religion In Axis Victory

Baltimore, June 15 (AP).—The Rev. Dr. Rufus W. Weaver, of Washington, chairman of the committee on public relations, told the Southern Baptist Convention today that a victory for Germany and Italy in Europe's war would mean "destruction" of religious liberty.

Business sessions of the week-long convention ended today, and the conference will be concluded with special church services tomorrow.

"The war now reaching its crisis in Europe is religious rather than political, because the basic issue is continuance of religious liberty. A totalitarian victory means its destruction," the speaker declared.

Dr. Weaver resigned his chairmanship and E. Hilton Jackson, of Washington, was named to head the public relations committee.

The convention appointed a committee to appear before the Social Security Board in Washington with instructions to protest a proposed security act amendment that would tax churches, schools, orphanages, missionary, benevolent and other church boards to provide benefits for employes other than ministers and those in church orders.

Dr. Eben Hill, 58, Ray Expert, Dies

Fitchburg, Mass., June 15 (AP).—Dr. Eben C. Hill, 58, of Temple, N. H., widely known roentgenologist and retired captain in the United States Army, died today at Burbank Hospital after a long illness.

A native of Baltimore and a graduate of Johns Hopkins University he studied medical research in Germany and was graduated from the Army Medical School.

He leaves a widow and two brothers, General John Hill, of Washington, and Bancroft Hill, of Baltimore.

FingerprintAll, D. C. Rainbow Veterans Urge

Col. Davis Arnold Elected President Of Organization

The District chapter of the Rainbow Division Veterans last night urged immediate registration and fingerprinting of all individuals in the United States, citizens and aliens.

The resolution, introduced by E. Claude Babcock, stated that innocent persons have nothing to fear from this procedure, which is made necessary by the emergency conditions which now exist.

Col. Davis G. Arnold was elected president of the chapter, and, with the other newly-elected officers, he was installed by National President Elmer Francis Neagle.

James E. Witherite was named honorary president; John W. Shiles, Paul G. Demonet and Joseph M. Cohan, vice presidents; Bentley Mulford, secretary; Irving H. Silverberg, treasurer; the Rt. Rev. Arlington A. McCallum, chaplain; and John H. DuBey, sergeant-at-arms.

The delegation to the national convention July 12 to 14 in Montgomery, Ala., will be headed by Witherite. Other delegates include Dr. Albert M. Klaczeskie, Col. Arnold, William H. Kay, Bernard V. Rhodes, Maj. McCallum, Mulford and Cohan.

Memorial services for the heroic dead of the division were conducted by Maj. McCallum, assisted by Frank E. Hill. The meeting was held at the Capitol Park Hotel.

Siam's Envoy Denies Treaties Menace Japan

Pacts With Allies Are Peaceful in Aim, New Minister Says

M. R. Seni Pramoj, newly arrived Minister from Thailand to the United States, said yesterday that Japanese suspicions of his country's nonaggression treaty with France and Britain are altogether unwarranted.

Thailand (the native atnd official name of Siam) is strictly neutral toward all powers in the war, Pramoj declared, and the nonaggression pact is an instrument of the country's peace policy.

Matter of Geography

"Our only aim is peace," said Pramoj, "and we hope that the new treaty will be a contribution toward that end. That Thailand should enter a nonaggression agreement with France and Britain was natural because we are neighbors; there are British and French possessions close to Thailand. But as to similar treaties with Japan, or Italy, or Germany, geography does not indicate such negotiations."

Pramoj said he felt that he came among friends when he landed at San Francisco this week, visiting America for the first time as his country's highest officer here.

"Friendship with the United States is a national tradition in Thailand," he explained. "Now that we have attained complete autonomy, you may be sure that we shall treasure and foster our amity with this great country.

Learned From West

"We have learned much from America and Europe. In restating our law (a task in which Pramoj took part as a judge of the Bangkok Imperial Court and a member of the National Judicial Council which drafts legislation) we have adapted western jurisprudence to our own needs.

"We have retained our own laws governing family and personal relations; but we have drawn upon the continental codes for statutes governing contracts and upon Anglo-American law for our commercial principles, such as the law of negotiable instruments."

The new minister, only 36, studied three years at Oxford University. But he is rapidly picking up American terms for after only a week here, yesterday he referred to his 5 and 7 year old sons as "the kiddies."

William Howlin Funeral Set For Tomorrow

Requiem mass will be celebrated for William Howlin, 79, of 135 Kentucky avenue southeast, at 10 a. m. tomorrow at Holy Comforter Church. Mr. Howlin died 6 p. m. Friday at his summer cottage at North Chesapeake Beach, Md., following a heart attack.

A native of Washington, he had been employed as a printer at the Government Printing Office for 40 years. He retired in 1927. As a young man he learned his trade with the firm of Judd & Detweiler, Inc., here.

His wife, Mrs. Margaret McAuliffe Howlin survives. Yesterday would have been their thirtieth wedding anniversary.

He was a member of Columbia No. 101 of the International Typographical Union and of the Holy Name Society. Burial will be at Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Martin A. Roberts, Library Employe, Dies in Baltimore

Mr. Roberts joined the library staff in 1903 as an assistant in the chief clerk's office. He was successively chief of the orders division and superintendent of the reading room before becoming chief assistant librarian. He lived in Baltimore, commuting daily to his office here.

Born in western Pennsylvania, youngest of six children, he was a graduate of Johns Hopkins University. Two brothers and a sister survive.

Thieves yesterday looted two parked cars here, escaping with $95, clothes and jewelry.

Former Judge Louis C. Barley, of Alexandria, reported to police here that his car was ransacked outside of Garfield Hospital, Tenth street and Florida avenue northwest, while he and two friends, Miss Betty Rogers, of the All States Hotel, and Miss Elizabeth Winslow, of the Evangeline Hotel, were visiting the hospital. The women lost three handbags full of clothes, they reported.

George de Bord, serologist for the District Health Department, and his wife, Sara, of 5336 Colorado avenue northwest, told police $15 in cash, $80 in travelers checks, two Government checks and a gold watch were taken from their car parked outside the East Potomac swimming pool.

Editor Asks Nazis About Wodehouse

Philadelphia, June 15 (AP).—Wesley Stout, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, said today he had signed an appeal to the German Charge d'Affaires at Washington to seek the release or whereabouts of P. G. Wodehouse, British author.

Wodehouse was last reported at Le Touquet, France, where he has lived for several years. Nothing has been heard from him since the German occupation of that section.

"The petition pointed out that Wodehouse is around 60 years of age and has never been active in politics," Stout said.

Stout added that Nelson Doubleday and Paul Reynolds, of New York, also had signed the petition.

C. A. Martin, China Dealer, Dies on Train

Nephew of Sherman Was Returning Here From Mother's Burial

En route here from Ashland, Ohio, where he had attended the burial of his mother on Friday, Carl A. Martin, 55, president of Martin's china and glassware store, died yesterday.

Mr. Martin, a great nephew of Gen. Sherman of the Civil War, succumbed of a heart attack on a train. His mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Martin, died Thursday.

Active in civic circles here, he was for many years a member of the Connecticut Avenue Businessmen's Association and served as its president three years ago.

Mr. Martin leaves his wife, Mrs. Pearl Holden Martin, with whom he lived at 2737 Devonshire place northwest; a brother, Frank S. Martin, of Charles Town, W. Va., and Mrs. Charles Stokes, of Ypsilanti, Mich.

Funeral rites will be at 3 p. m. tomorrow at Gawler's funeral home, 1756 Pennsylvania avenue northwest. Services will be held Tuesday in Cleveland.

Firemen's Retirement Bill Faces Revision

Commissioners Seek to Avert Drain on Finances

Revision by a special Senate District subcommittee of a House-approved bill to permit voluntary retirement of policemen and firemen appeared likely yesterday.

After holding a 90-minute hearing on the measure, Chairman Overton, of the special subcommittee, expressed sympathy with the Commissioners' view that it should be modified to avert a serious drain on District finances.

As passed by the House on May 27, the bill permits Metropolitan, Park and White House policemen, as well as District firemen, to apply for voluntary retirement at half pay after 25 years' service.

Fire Fighters Back Bill

Enactment of the legislation was urged at yesterday's hearing by John L. Werheim, president, and William T. Kruglak, secretary, of Local No. 36, International Association of Fire Fighters, and Frank L. Asch, chairman of the legislative committee of the Policemen's Association.

Opposition to the measure, in its present form, was voiced by Maj. Daniel J. Donovan, District auditor, who represented the Commissioners, and Rufus S. Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers' Association.

The Commissioners would drop their objections, said Maj. Donovan, if the period of service is extended from 25 to 30 years. As an alternative, the 25-year plan would be acceptable if it is provided that the applicant for voluntary retirement must be at least 55 years old, Maj. Donovan said.

Favors Minimum Age

Senator Overton said he personally favors amending the bill by inserting a minimum age requirement and limiting the appropriation for payment of voluntary retirement pensions to $30,000 annually.

Lusk said the House-approved bill has a potential cost of $336,000 a year and would enable 112 firemen and 110 policemen to retire at once, if they desired.

"The purpose of this new provision, since these men are retired at any time they are disabled in line of duty, is to permit them either to quit at a comparatively early time in life in order to take it easy or else to get another job," Lusk declared.

Maj. Donovan said a poll conducted among policemen and firemen who are in the 25-year service bracket showed that only 22 would avail themselves of voluntary retirement, at a cost to the District of about $26,000 a year.

Mock Congress Winds Up Week Of Youth Council

The Washington Youth Council yesterday ended a week of "demonstrations" for passage of the Youth Act with a mock legislature at the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and N streets northwest.

The legislature adopted resolutions supporting the Wagner Health bill, the Wagner-Steagall housing bill and the youth bill. "Increasing attacks upon our democratic institutions, constituted in antialien and antilabor legislation pending in Congress" and "legislative or administrative action which would result in curtailing the civil liberties of the American people under the guise of a national emergency" were condemned.

A statement issued by the council said that "to preserve for our generation and for the generations that follow a society free from the terrors of war and the tyrannies of dictatorship," it urged:

Protection of the Social Security Act, the National Labor Relations Act, the Walsh-Healy Act and the Wage and Hour Act; opposition to antialien, antilabor and antiminority measures; passage of the American Youth Act; preservation and extension of the social program.

Emory Church Class, Scouts Hold Outing

Members of the Box Bible Class and Boy Scouts of Emory Methodist Church yesterday held their annual outing, unfurled a new American flag, and heard pleas for reconsecration to patriotic and spiritual ideals.

Guests at the Broadwater Point (Md.) cottage of Elmer Johnson, they joined in pledging allegiance to the flag shortly after it was raised upon a new staff near the waterfront, while C. Wilfred Smith, Emory choir director, sang "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Dr. Horace E. Cromer, Emory pastor, told the assembly that recent events abroad placed new emphasis on the significance of living under the rule of the American flag, "symbol of the life and liberty of the land we love so much."

Paul W. Edwards who leaves soon was presented a New Testament on behalf of the class by John Gardner, class president. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, hosts, also spoke.

Heating Engineers To Convene Today AtChesapeake Bay

While District residents swelter, the men responsible for air conditioning the Nation's buildings will gather at Chesapeake Bay today to open the semiannual convention of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers.

To be held from Sunday through Wednesday, today's program will include a meeting of the research executive committee, the council and the research committee.

A technical session at 10 a. m. tomorrow (Monday) will officially open the convention, which is being held at the Wardman Park Hotel. Other technical discussions will be held throughout the remaining days of the convention, all starting at 10 a. m.

Inspection trips will be made by the society to the Naval Testing Basin, at Carderock, Md., the Capitol power plant and air conditioning systems and the central heating system.

Hazen Asked to Let Haskell Keep His Title at Home

Five Representatives yesterday asked Commissioner Hazen to retain Frank B. Haskell as superintendent of the Home for Aged and Infirm.

The District supply bill, as approved by Congress, provides a $4,600 post for a new superintendent, although Haskell's salary is left intact. Haskell will remain on the pay roll but the new man will have the superintendent's title.

The Congressmen's visit to Hazen yesterday was to prevail upon the Commissioners to allow Haskell to keep his title and call the new man "director" or a similar title.

Creation of the post followed a sweeping investigation of all welfare institutions by Representative D'Alesandro (Democrat), of Maryland. The new superintendent will be appointed before July 1, when the salary begins.

Calling on Hazen were Representative Poage (Democrat), of Texas; Representative Beckworth (Democrat), of Texas; Representative Bryson (Democrat), of South Carolina; Representative Gathings (Democrat), of Arkansas, and Representative McMillan (Democrat), of South Carolina.

Repair Defects In Defenses, Veterans Urge

United Spanish War, Group of D. C. Elects C. B. Lucas as Chief

The United Spanish War Veterans yesterday urged Congress and the President "to remedy without delay the defects so palpable in our national defense."

Meeting at the Pythian Temple, 1012 Ninth street northwest, for the forty-first annual encampment of the District Department, the veterans elected Calvin B. Lucas commander. Other officers chosen were Dr. Herbert M. Manning, senior vice commander; Alvin Luskey, junior vice commander; J. J. Fitzpatrick, marshal, and William LaRoche, chaplain.

Recalling the lack of preparedness in 1898, the veterans called for an Army, Navy and Air Force "fully competent to ward off an invasion of the territory of the United States," and added:

Approve Steps Taken

"We heartily approve the steps now being taken by our Chief Executive and the Congress and all further steps that may be necessary to remedy without delay the defects so palpable in our national defense."

They also asked the President "to stamp out without mercy any effort to sabotage the Government of the United States" so that "true Americans, whether native born or adopted citizens, can go about their daily work without the fear of untoward things happening."

Resolutions were also adopted thanking, for their services to Spanish War veterans, Gen. Frank T. Hines, administrator of veterans' affairs, and Representative Martin F. Smith (Democrat), of Washington, chairman of the House Committee on Pensions.

Ballot for Delegates

Balloting for delegates to the national encampment August 18 to 22 in Detroit also was held yesterday, but the results were not available last night.

The women's auxiliary of the veteran's organization met separately at the Pythian Temple and elected Mrs. Pauline Thompson president.

Mrs. Carrie Flaherty was chosen senior vice president; Mrs. Ethel Finn, junior vice president; Mrs. Margaret Binnix, chaplain; Mrs. Mabel Hessen, patriotic instructor; Mrs. Gertrude Miles, historian; Mrs. Helen Grissam, conductor; Mrs. Madge Ryce, assistant conductor; Mrs. Louise Freeland, guard, and Mrs. Helen O'Niel, assistant guard.

Welfare Post Talk Names Van Hyning

Magnussen, Savin Also Are Mentioned For $6,500 Job

Conrad Van Hyning, of Amherst, Va., former Florida director of public welfare, is mentioned prominently for the newly created post of principal assistant welfare director for the District.

Other names mentioned yesterday for the $6,500 job were Leifur Magnussen, formerly with the International Labor Office, and William Savin, of the Family Service Society.

Van Hyning, who recently completed more than two years on a welfare assignment in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., was assistant State administrator of the FERA in New York.

The new post was recommended by the House sub-committee on District appropriations for the purpose of "providing an officer who will devote his entire time to the inspection, and administration of the public welfare institutions of the District which will be under his immediate supervision and for which he will be responsible."

The appropriations subcommittee report stated:

"It is the recommendation of the committee that this officer keep in constant touch with the conditions at the institutions and visit them at regular and frequent intervals. The committee feels that the fixing of responsibility on one qualified official who will devote his entire time to this duty will go a long way toward eliminating unsatisfactory conditions which have existed in several institutions for some time."

The recommendation for the new job followed an investigation of welfare institutions by Representative D'Alesandro (Democrat), of Maryland.

Roosevelt Signs Bill Guaranteeing Eagle's Freedom

The bald eagle, which symbolizes America's ideals of freedom, no longer need fear for his own freedom.

He is emancipated under an act approved by Congress and signed by President Roosevelt, Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes reported yesterday.

The act prohibits anyone from possessing bald eagles, under penalty of a maximum fine of $500 and imprisonment of six months, either or both. Ickes said the bird was threatened with extinction by hunters and collectors.

The act, to be enforced by game management agents and deputies of the Interior Department's bureau of biological survey, was sponsored by Senator Walsh (Democrat), and Representative Clason (Republican), of Massachusetts.

Reynolds' Daughter Fleeing From Italy

Caught in Italy by the war, 23-year-old Frances Reynolds, daughter of Senator Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, has booked passage on the Clipper plane sailing from Lisbon June 22, aides of the Senator said here yesterday.

Miss Reynolds sailed for Italy last April to study at Florence. She formerly was the wife of Lieut. [illegible] Baron Carleton, jr., of Bristol, R. I., grandson of Senator Samuel P. Colt.

Group to Boom Willkie

An organization meeting for a "Wilkie in Washington Committee" will be held tomorrow night at 8:30 in the Carlton Hotel. Twenty-nine Washington business and professional men will participate, according to H. B. Page, attorney here.

Independent Mind America's Need, 4-H Clubs Decide

The ability of Americans to think for themselves, 4-H Club boys and girls decided here yesterday, will go a long way toward preserving the Nation's democratic way of life.

They agreed during a panel discussion that conferences and fact-finding, independent of the influence of those who would sway opinions were essentials of democracy.

The approximately 200 youths attending the 1940 National 4-H Club Camp, also heard Genevieve Forbes Herrick, magazine feature writer, describe Washington — "where you're always welcome and never missed"—and other speakers.

Yesterday afternoon they went to the Capitol and interviewed their Congressmen, then were hosts to Agriculture Department officials and District youth organization leaders at a garden party at their camp on the Mall. A carnival last night concluded the day's activities.

Bandit in Beret Sought in Holdup Of Hotel Clerks

A colored bandit, wearing a beret and a turtle-neck sweater, was being sought by police last night for the $300 holdup of two night clerks at the Fairfax Hotel. Twenty-first street and Massachusetts avenue northwest.

James M. Young, of 1807 Newton street northwest, discovered the bandit when he went to the manager's office on a routine inspection tour. The man threatened him with a revolver and then locked him in a washroom.

Paul J. Smith, 728 Ninth street northeast, the telephone operator, was next confronted by the armed intruder. Smith also was locked in a room adjoining the lobby.

Both men were liberated about 30 minutes later by a milk man. They reported the bandit had forced open two money drawers and escaped.

Commercial Art Commencement Rites Held on Connecticut Avenue; Senorita Escalante Wins Honors

Thirty prospective commercial artists, interior decorators and costume designers last night were presented with diplomas and awards in commencement exercises at Abbott Art School, 1143 Connecticut avenue northwest.

Recognition of the talents of class leaders came with presentation of awards by Miss Anne Fuller Abbott, principal, to students in a dozen courses.

Among those honored was Senorita Maria Teresa Escalante, daughter of the Venezuelan Ambassador, who showed the greatest improvement in the commercial illustration class.

Miss Yolande de Mauduit, of 1763 N street northwest, received the prize for best work in the interior decoration class, while Miss Ann Mason, Tryon, N. C., and Emily Tolson, 2910 R street northwest, were declared those showing the greatest improvement, and outstanding in the night school class, respectively, in the same course.

Pictorial Award

The award for the best work in the pictorial illustration class went to Betsy Rust, of Leesburg, Va., while Virginia McCabe, 3713 T street northwest, received honorabel mention.

Other award winners are as follows: Mary Hillberg, of 4105 Wisconsin avenue northwest, best in the life class; Bette Perkins, 5510 Sixteenth street northwest, best in the research class; Frances Respess, 1712 Thirty-seventh street northwest, best in junior fashion and costume class; Phyllis Bauer, Arlington, Va., best in junior intermediate class; Ugenna Schellhase, 821 Emerson street northwest, best in costume design class; Marian Lever, 2000 Connecticut avenue northwest, most improvement in the costume class; Marjorie Russ, of Tampa, Fla., honorable mention in the costume class; Jeanne Belote, 1613 Longfellow street northwest, best in fashion illustration class; Miss Martha Walsh, Charles Town, W. Va., most improvement in fashion illustration class, and Hazel Howard, 1713 North Portal drive northwest, honorable mention in this class.

Commercial Illustration

Betsy Rust, of Leesburg, Va., outstanding in the commercial illustration class; honorable mention to Mary Hillberg, 4305 Wisconsin avenue northwest; Dick E. Roberts, 3151 Mount Pleasant street northwest, and Louis Niefled, 1247 Owen place northeast.

Billy Hosselbarth, of 5304 Illinois avenue northwest, and Betty Bean, of Kensington, Md., outstanding in junior elementary and junior illustration classes respectively. Elizabeth Banigan, of Arlington, Va., won the award for best puppet in the puppet show.

Three-year certificates in commercial illustration to Christine Thorpe, 1364 Columbia road; Philip Kromas, 1236 Twelfth street northwest; Charles Hoover, Winchester, Va.; William Credle, Washington. Three-year certificates in interior decoration to Jane Hovey, Nashville, Tenn.; Two-year certificates in interior decoration to Lucille Poe, Apex, N. C.; Anne Mason Cooke, Charleston, S. C. Two-year certificates in costume design to Helen Forbes, 3414 Lowell street northwest; Angel Mesrobian, 1824 Wisconsin avenue northwest; Jeanne Barber, 1407 Kennedy street northwest.

Father of 3 Motherless Boys Worried as Camp Drive Lags

This is Father's Day, but it holds nothing but gloom for Bill Smith, wondering what is to become of his three motherless sons this summer.

Now that school is out, the boys, 8, 10 and 12—are on their own and their father is worried. Aunt Mary, who has been helping run the household since Mrs. Smith's death, must return to her own family. The father can afford neither a housekeeper nor to send the boys to camp.

This case is one of hundreds which the Washington Council of Church Women is trying to assist in its campaign for $7,500 to send needy, deserving children to summer camps.

First week of the drive has been far from encouraging, said Mrs. Frank A. Linzel, chairman. She expressed hope that returns will be boosted this week, following yesterday's Government pay day.

Contributions may be sent to The Post or to Claude Knisely, care of the Riggs National Bank. Checks should be made payable to "Needy Children's Camps." The drive is scheduled to end Thursday.

FSA to Allow Home Buying At Greenbelt

Government Agrees To Private Ownership In Federal Settlement

Change in the policy of the Farm Security Administration to permit private ownership of homes in the Greenbelt Federal settlement in nearby Prince Georges County, Md., appears certain, it was learned yesterday.

A committee of Greenbelt residents, headed by Dayton W. Hull, has been in conference with Maj. John O. Walker, chief of the FSA resettlement division, and has reached an agreement whereby the Government will lease tracts of land in the development for private home construction.

Definite plans have not been completed but the FSA has agreed upon the basic principle that the land will be leased on an annual rental of the ground in a 99-year lease, Hull said last night.

The ground rent will be reasonable, probably about $20 a year for tracts of 5,000 square feet so that ground rent and town and county taxes will approximate $10 a month.

Taxes will be paid in addition to the ground rent and will be based upon the costs of government of the development and the county tax rate.

Several proposals are being studied by the citizens' group for presentation to the F. S. A. officials. One would provide for construction of the houses by a private contractor in cooperation with the F. S. A. Another plan provided for the group of persons wishing to build to select an architect and have plans and specifications drawn and then have the architect supervise the construction of the houses. A third plan would provide for leasing the home section en bloc, with provision for community care of lawns and parkings, while a fourth would permit cooperative action by the citizens in leasing the land and constructing the homes. In the latter event, a person who would find it necessary to move could do so and another resident take his place without the usual red tape.

Financing of the homes would be through Federal Housing Administration funds regardless of which plan is selected.

Farm Security will retain the authority to pass upon the basic ground plans and the exteriors of the houses and to provide certain restrictions, primarily the prohibition of dogs and pigs, Hull said.

The present restrictions regarding the maximum salary of residents will not apply to the homeowning section, Hull said, and it is probable that persons now receiving more salary than regulations permit will be permitted to remain in the present settlement until the plans for the home-owning section are worked out.

Among the other members of the housing committee which has been working on the plans are Mayor George Warner, Town Councilman Edward Walther, Dr. Joe Still, Mrs. Lucille Cooper and Donald Cooper, editor of the Co-Operator, the town weekly newspaper.

Roosevelt Takes Potomac Cruise

President Roosevelt left late yesterday for an overnight cruise down the Potomac River on the yacht Potomac.

Capt. Rene de Chambrun, member of the staff of the military attache of the French Embassy, was among his guests. Others included Averell Harriman, board chairman of the Union Pacific Railroad, just named to the Advisory Commission on National Defense, and Mrs. Harriman, Secretary of Commerce Hopkins and Miss Marguerite Le Hand, the President's personal secretary.

Two Children, Man Injured In Accidents

Two children and a man were injured in traffic accidents here yesterday.

James McCloud, 11, colored, of 1700 Florida avenue northwest, was struck by an automobile near his home. He suffered a fracture right wrist and head injuries and was taken to Garfield Hosiptal. Eugene T. Fairchild, 24, of 1323 Clifton street northwest, who police said was the driver, was charged with operating an automobile without the proper eyeglasses.

Fifteen-year-old James Smith, of 4030 Gault place northeast, was hit by an automobile while he was riding his bicycle at Thirty-fourth and Dix streets northeast. His left leg was injured. The driver, according to police, was George W. West, Bladensburg, Md.

A compound fracture of the right leg and head injuries were sustained by William Lovings, 49, colored, of 320 Dixon court southwest, when he was knocked down by a hit-run driver in the 800 block Fourth street southwest. A suspect was later arrested after a chase by witnesses and police.

Capital News In Brief

Greediest Thieves

Thieves who ransacked the home of Dr. Harry Ford Andersen, 1717 Poplar lane northwest, didn't stop with that. They also took his automobile from in front of his home, he reported to police. Police seeking the housebreakers were warned to be especially alert since the thieves had two pistols among their loot.

Mowers Reap $500

Two youngsters with a new version of an old racket yesterday used a lawnmower and a scythe to collect some $500 in cash and valuables from two Washington homes.

After Antonio P. Pirola, of 1884 Park road northwest, and Margaret Mills, 1823 Newton street northwest, reported their homes were entered mysteriously during their absence, police investigated. They learned from neighbors that two boys with lawn trimming tools had been canvassing the neighborhood and had paused some time at the Pirola and Mills homes but had mowed no lawns.

Punkin Creek Comedy

"Aaron Slick from Punkin Creek," a three-act comedy, will be presented by the Young People's Club of St. Teresa's Catholic Church on Monday and Tuesday at 8:15 p. m. in the church auditorium at Thirteenth and V streets southeast.

Catch Purse-Snatcher

A 29-year-old man was captured by fleet-footed citizens last night after, police said, he snatched the pocketbook from Hedwig Roser, of the Bellevue Hotel, in Lincoln Park. When she screamed, passersby took up the chase, overtaking the suspect in the 1200 block of North Capitol street.

ABC Head Finds House Report a Help

Lodge Says Dealers Are Laying in Beer To Evade Arms Tax

Chairman Thomas E. Lodge of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board yesterday declared recommendations of the House sub-committee investigating the A. B. C. Board operations "in general" aid in the "orderly and efficient administartion of the law."

In his first official statement since publication of the report, Lodge said "many of the recommendations for specific changes" have been under consideration for some time "and a great many of them were offered in my testimony before the subcommittee."

At the same time, the A. B. C. chairman, after a talk yesterday with Commissioner Hazen, said he would notify the Federal Alcohol Administration and the Senate Finance Committee of reports local dealers were laying in supplies of beer in order to dodge the new defense tax on beer, which becomes effective July 1.

Calls Evasion Disloyal

It was understood the Senate Finance Committee had begun a study to prevent evasion of the tax. Lodge yesterday termed evasion "unpatriotic" since the increased tax is intended to raise funds to finance American defense.

The House subcommittee recommended in its report the sale of beer and wine only after 1 p. m. Sundays, and week-day closing of package stores at 10 p. m. The present provision forbidding one to stand while drinking was hit by the report.

"Some of the recommendations proposed serious restrictions of licensees under the act," Lodge said. "Notably is this true of proposals for restrictions on various forms of signs and advertising for curtailment of hours, for some measure of control over cutthroat competition, and for segregation of departments of the so-called combination stores."

Sure of Cooperation

He said most of these suggestions came originally from the public and the trade, and "I feel sure when the District Commissioners, who have the regulatory power under the act, find an opportunity to study them and adopt proper regulations, the trade will be found giving the authorities fullest cooperation."

In some ways, he said, the recommendations of the subcommittee "would bring about liberalization of the present methods of doing business."

"Such proposals will be fully considered, and where not incompatible with the public interest, will without doubt be adopted," he said.

Luncheon Honors REA Inventors

Two REA engineers, John F. Atkinson and Donnan E. Basler, were guests of honor Friday at a luncheon attended by Rural Electrification Administrator Harry Slattery, in recognition of their joint invention, a carrier signal system.

The signal device will facilitate power maintenance work by registering on a tape, at one central point, the time and place of a failure anywhere on the system. The system is primarily for use in rural distribution.

After the luncheon the two engineers left for Chicago, where they will supervise installation of their system.

British Embassy Thanks Donors

The British Embassy yesterday expressed its gratitude to Americans who have been sending relief funds to the embassy here.

The embassy suggested, however, that Americans wishing to make contributions to British agencies address the British Red Cross Society, 14 Grosvenor Crescent, London, S. W. 1, or Personal Service League, 21 Lowndes Square, London S. W. The later organizatoin was said to be primarily concerned with civilian relief.

The embassy also pointed out that relief is being handled also by the American Red Cross, the American Society for British Medical and Civilian Aid, Inc., the British War Relief Society, Inc., and Bundles for Britain.

Senate Passes $1,224,784,916 Relief Bill

Measure Carries Several Provisions Bearing on Defense

The Senate yesterday passed a $1,224,784,916 relief bill carrying many items bearing on the national defense program.

The bill, which now goes to the House for consideration of many changes, authorizes noncombatant training for the 300,000 young men in the Civilian Conservation Corps. This would include cooking, mechanics, photography, radio and other training valuable in wartime.

President Roosevelt's request for a $50,000,000 war relief fund, to be spent for agricultural or medical supplies in this country for use of refugees in Europe, was approved.

Also approved, by a 58 to 16 vote, was a $100,000,000 item for removal of surplus agricultural products. Neither the President nor the Senate Appropriations Committee had asked for it.

This fund would be used to distribute food among low income groups, to finance the stamp plan for retail distribution of surpluses, to help pay for lunches for school children, and for export subsidies. A similar fund of $185,000,000 was voted by Congress previously in the annual agriculture appropriation bill.

Largest item in the bill passed yesterday was $975,000,000 for the WPA for the first eight months of the fiscal year beginning July 1. Administrator F. C. Harrington has announced that a considerable portion of this will go for airport construction and other military and defense projects.

The Senate approved an amendment offered by Senator Brown (Democrat), of Michigan, relaxing the 18-month mandatory vacation period for WPA workers who have made an "honest" attempt to find private employment.

Court Denies Plea Of KTSA for FCC Aid

Justice James W. Morris, of the District Court yesterday ruled that a radio station has no right to have the Federal Communications Commission protect its revenue against competition from another station.

Justice Morris dismissed the suit of Station KTSA, San Antonio, to compel the FCC to allow it to intervene in the proceedings by which Station KMAC sought more power and a change in frequency. KTSA claimed that its business would be harmed if KMAC's petition was granted.

Four Men Held, Fifth Sought as 'Accident' Develops Into Murder Quiz

A routine investigation of what appeared to be an "accidental" death turned into a murder inquiry 24 hours after Ernest W. Hartman, 48, an inmate of Soldiers Home, died at Gallinger Hospital, police revealed yesterday.

Four men had been arrested last night and a fifth was sought as police attempted to solve the mystery uncovered late Friday night by Detective Sergeants William J. Liverman and Dewey L. Guest.

Autopsy Showed Injury

Hartman was found unconscious in the woods about 300 yards from Harewood road northeast, near Fort Drive, Thursday morning by Albert Hansboro, colored, of 3 Fort Drive. He was taken to Gallinger Hospital and admitted for acute alcoholism. He died the same day.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald performed an autopsy Friday and it was disclosed Hartman suffered a fractured skull. The coroner notified police who began a routine inquiry, thinking Hartman probably had injured himself in a fall.

Friday night, Liverman said, an intoxicated man was found in the woods who said he thought Hartman had been in a fight, and he was held until he sobered up.

Continued investigation, it was said, undercovered a couple of ramshackle huts resembling a hobo jungle in the woods behind Soldiers Home. Three men, all inmates of the Home, were there drunk, Liverman said. The place was littered with empty half-gallon whisky jars.

One "Remembered"

One of the men, the detective stated, remembered Hartman had been hit over the head with a bottle Wednesday by another old soldier, who was not present.

The four men, the one who remembered a fight and the three in the shacks, were taken into custody until they could tell coherent stories.

Yesterday they identified Hartman's alleged assailant and his apprehension was ordered. He was said to live at the Home, but has been A. W. O. L. since Thursday.

Four Get Appointments To Montgomery Posts

Four appointments for Montgomery County were announced yesterday at Rockville.

Victory Cooney was named deputy by Sheriff Leslie Carlin; Samuel R. Plummer, deputy game warden, by the State Conservation Commission; C. Hunter Martin and Marie Willis, notaries public, by Gov. O'Conor.

SPORTS

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Detroit, June 15.—The team that is now causing talk in the American League is the Detroit Tigers. They haven't been carrying on scandalously, but they've been plugging along at a pace that now stamps 'em as a team to be reckoned with in the league. Two months ago, the Tigers were regarded as a de-fanged outfit which which would be fortunate to finish in the first division.

POVICH

But look at 'em now. As late as yesterday they were up in second place, only two games out of the lead. And there has been no reason to state that the Tigers have been playing over their heads. They've simply discovered that they're in a league that isn't so hot, and that the kind of ball they can play may come very close to winning the pennant.

We still think the Yankees will come along in due time to take it all, because we think they're the only solid club in the league, but it is no longer any forgone conclusion that the Red Sox and Indians will finish second and third, respectively. The Tigers are in there punching and are gathering a heap of support for their chances to beat out either the Boston or Cleveland clubs, or both of 'em.

In contrast to the Red Sox and Indians, there is nothing radically wrong with the Tigers. Boston has no pitching, and the Indians outfielders can't hit much, but the Tigers present no glaring weakness; not yet at any rate. Boston is the only club that can summon more power than the Tigers, but Detroit can lord it over the Red Sox with its pitching. Tommy Bridges and Buck Newsom are a potent pair for any club and Schoolboy Rowe is making a surprising comeback.

The most surprising development on the Tiger team is the apparent fact that Rudy York can play first base. You'd never have guessed it in the south where the stationary York earned the soubriquet of the "totem pole" first baseman, because he was not much more active than one. But there has been no complaint whatsoever with York's fielding since the season started. Apparently he was just waiting for the gong.

And Dick Bartell, despite his Seabiscuit knees, has tightened the Tigers' infield defense. He has made a magpie outfit out of what formerly was a morgue—like Detroit infield. Bartell's infectious spirit has had its effect on both Charley Gehringer and Pinky Higgins, who formerly spoke only when spoken to, with never an idea of shouting encouragement to a Detroit pitcher. Silence may be golden, but not in a big league infield.

Final opinion on the Detroit infield must be reserved, of course, until summer weather truly sets in, because then the diamonds will be hard baked and then we will learn if Bartell and Higgins can cope with the ground balls that go rocketing through the dirt. Baseball men place great store by infielders who are not bothered by fast infields, but until Bartell and Higgins slacken their pace the Tigers have little cause for worry there.

In Washington, the fans have no higher regard for Hank Greenberg as an outfielder after watching his performances in Griffith Stadium, but Greenberg is doing all right in the outfield. Griffith Stadium, with its big playing surface, is tough on him. But in every other park he can play with his back to the wall and cut down the margin for error.

The Tigers have the second best catcher in the league, if not the best. The only fellow who might eclipse George Tebbetts is Bill Dickey, and Dickey this season is no ball of fire. Tebbetts is no slugger, but he hits well enough. He catches smartly which is the big item on a club that doesn't need his power.

We think the club that the Tigers will beat out to get into the first three is the Cleveland Indians. There's a team that you may have. It unvariably profanes its own skill with what is seemingly a lack of courage and confidence, and the inability to win the games that are most important.

Cleveland has the only pitching staff that compares with the Yankees in skill. Bob Feller, Al Milnar, Johnny Allen, Al Smith and Mel Harder are a potent quintet of pitchers. Where are you going to find three infielders on one team who are better or as good, as Third Baseman Ken Keltner, Shortstop Lou Boudreau, and Second Baseman Roy Mack. The answer is nowhere. Cleveland has better than tolerable catching, too, in Rollie Hemsley and Frankie Pytlak. But, alas its outfielders can't hit. Beau Bell does tolerable enough with the bat but the others—Roy Weatherly, Ben Chapman and Jeff Heath will never terrorize any pitcher.

We don't like the way the Cleveland club acts when the chips are down. A week ago were in the east with a chance to do themselves some good—to take over the league lad, in fact. And what happened. They met up with the Yankees and Red Sox in five games and lost four of 'em. We repeat, you may have the Indians.

Thomson, Smith Added to Links Match July 4

The field for the charity pro-amateur tournament July 4 at Indian Spring began to look like a national championship event as wired acceptances were received yesterday from Jimmy Thomson, the long-driving ace and Horton Smith, who finished third in last week's National Open.

SMITH

Added to Gene Sarazen, Paul Runyan, Bobby Cruickshank and Tony Penna, the total big-name stars is now six and invitations have only been out two days.

Entire proceeds of the tournament, expected to be in the neighborhood of $5,000, will be turned over to the War Relief Fund of the District Red Cross.

Deadline Goes By As Nats Remain In Eighth Place

Special Dispatch to The Post

Detroit, Mich., June 15.—Last-minute efforts of the Nats to swing a pair of trades before tonight's midnight deadline proved futile. The Washington team will finish the season as currently constituted except for whatever trades may be made via the waiver method or with minor league clubs.

The Nats had been looking in the direction of the White Sox particularly, for new talent. Manager Jimmy Dykes had expressed an interest in Pitcher Joe Krakauskas, but he permitted the time limit to lapse without renewing an offer he made to the Nats. The Browns also turned down a trade proposed by the Washington club. Details of it were not divulged.

Sweepida Wins Rogers Purse At Hollywood

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, June 15.—Flashing the same form that won the $50,000 Santa Anita Derby last February, Sweepida, pride of California, captured the $10,000 Will Rogers Handicap at Hollywood Park today over a crack field of 3-year-olds.

The H. C. Hill contender, running again under the expert handling of Jockey Ralph Neves, scampered into nose out Weigh Anchor and Last Gold in a blanket photo-finish. The big Eastern threat of the stake, Woof Woof, was eighth in the field of 14.

Victory of the California-bred Sweepida made a formidable challenger for another big derby prize—the $25,000 Hollywood Derby July 20.

Sweepida, given a rest after showing little success following her win in the Santa Anita Derby, was little regarded by the turf enthusiasts, and paid off handsomely at $32, $13.20 and $7.40. Weigh Anchor, runner-up to Big Ben on the odds board for public affection, paid $5 and $3.80, and Last Gold returned $4.80.

Sweepida ran the 7 furlongs in 1 minute 23 4-5 seconds.

Other starters were Son of War, Battery, Carminita, Argonne Woods, Wee Toney, Shantytown, Tay Sweep and Augury.

Gil Hunt Takes Penn Tennis Title

Haverford, Pa., June 15 (AP).—Gilbert Hunt, of Washington, D. C., won the Pennsylvania State lawn tennis championship today by beating Isadore Bellis, of the University of Pennsylvania, 8—6, 7—5, 6—4, in the finals of the annual tournament. It was Bellis' first defeat of the season.

Lumbering Bonura Out at Plate as Nats Drop Pair

Fearless Zeke Bonura, the Nats' first baseman, appears to be about to miss the plate in his attempt to score from third after Cecil Travis grounded out in the ninth inning of yesterday's second game with the Tigers. Birdie Tebbetts, however, is all set to tag the sliding Zeke. Detroit won both games, 11-1 and 8-0

Andy K Easily Wins $10,000 Kent 'Cap

Burst of Speed in Last Sixteenth Nets Two-Length Victory in Kent Stakes; Pass Out Second, Gramps Third and Callahadion 4th

By the Associated Press

Delaware Park, Del., June 15.—Turning with a burst of speed through the last sixteenth, Milladale Stable's Andy K. raced to a convincing victory here today in the fourth running of the $10,000 added Kent, richest stake of the current meeting for 3-year-olds, exclusively.

Never worse than second, the speedy son of Jack High and Alice Foster turned in the best effort of his career to come to the judges two lengths to the van of Brandon Stable's Pass Out. It was a tight fit for the place and Pass Out's margin over John Hay Whitney's Gramps was a neck. Mrs. Ethel V. Mars' Kentucky Derby winner, Gallahadion, was fourth, a length to the rear of Gramps.

Andy K. was the highweight of the Kent field and his victory was all the more impressive because he was forced to carry the heavy impost of 124 pounds over the exacting 1 mile and a sixteenth route. He negotiated the distance over a lightning-fast track in 1:45 flat, 2 4-5 seconds off the track mark.

It was the richest Kent running to date and Andy K.'s score was worth $10,100 to Anthony Pelleteri and Melvin Emerich, of New Orleans, who owns the Millsdale establishment. Top money in the Kent boosted Andy K.'s winnings for his 3-year-old career to $24,350.

The shirt-sleeved crowd of 15,000, sweltering in a humid atmosphere, sent Joseph E. Widener's Roman postward the Kent favorite, but he collapsed at the head of the stretch and beat only two horses. Andy K. was second choice and paid $8.70, $5.10 and $4.30 across the board.

Friday's Leaders Drop To Fourth Place in Inverness Matches

By the Associated Press

Toledo, Ohio, June 14.—The sixth annual $8,400 Inverness four-ball golf matches turned into a free-for-all scrap today with four teams almost neck-and-neck as they awaited Sunday's final two rounds.

Henry Picard and Johnny Revolta, leaders yesterday with a plus 10 score, absorbed two beatings today and dropped to fourth place. Sam Snead and Ralph Guldahl took over the top spot with plus 8 as the result of a two-up win over Jimmy Demaret and Dick Metz, and a three-up win over Picard-Revolta.

Knotted in second place with plus 6 were Demaret and Metz, and Harold "Jug" McSpaden and Lawson Little, although each twosome was beaten once in today's double-header.

Other standings at the five-sevenths mark: Gene Sarazen and Clayton Heafner, even; Horton

Betty Jameson Wins Crown In Trans-Miss.

Beats Patty Berg 2 Up In Thrilling 36-Hole Final for 2d Title

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, June 15.—Betty Jameson, the tousled women's national golf champion, of San Antonio, Tex., burned up the Glen Echo course in 3 under par today to defeat Patty Berg, the defending champion, 2 up in a thrilling 36-hole bout for the transmississippi championship.

It remained anybody's game to the seventeenth hole, where Betty won with a par 4 after Patty was forced to recover from a trap for a bogey 5. All the Texan had to do was halve the home green, but Patty's resistance was completely broken by now and she overrode the green with her third shot for another bogey 6, while her opponent was in nicely for a par.

The match seesawed back and fourth all day and Betty, a tough customer in match play when her putter was working, was pretty downhearted coming up to the fifteenth one down.

Gets Birdie

But here she cracked in the most spectacular shot of the day—a chip-in from a foot off the green. She aimed for nearly two minutes then threaded the needle for a birdie three on the 351-yard hole.

They halved the sixteenth with birdie fours, but Betty was on top to stay.

The nip-and-tuck battle is best described by the fact the girls halved only 15 of the 36 holes. The other 21 were seesawed back and forth, with neither player able to gain more than a 2 up advantage.

Patty, firing a 3 under 77, held an indecisive 1-up lead on the United States champion at the noon intermission, with the first half produc-

Washington Bats Silenced as Tigers Take Twin Bill, 11-1 and 8-0; Griffs Fumble Scoring Chances; Gelbert Hurls

Detroit, June 15.—The Nats made good today on their first opportunity to lose two games in a single afternoon in the West. By scores of 11 to 1 and 8 to 0, they provided a double victory for the Tigers, and that team you now see at the bottom of the league standings is Washington.

The wrested eighth place from the Philadelphia Athletics with today's defeats on a mass production basis. They punched out zeroes for themselves in 17 out of the 18 innings. When Jake Early wasn't hitting home runs for the Nats, they weren't scoring today, and Jake hit only one home run.

Against big Buck Newsom in the first game, the Nats could stir up only three hits. Against Rookie Johnny Gorsica in the second game the Nats were an improved ball club. They made four hits in that one.

Sidney Hudson and Joe Haynes were the losing pitchers. A jubilant mob of 26,402 Detroit fans saw the Tigers belt the Nats' rookies around unmercifully in the two ball games which produced Hank Greenberg's tenth home run of the year and a pair of homers by Frank Higgins.

With the second game beyond reclaim, Manager Bucky Harris called Charley Gelbert from the bullpen for pitching duty in the eighth inning. For one pitch he was successful. The next pitch was pounded into the leftfield stands by Higgins for the Tigers' last run of the day.

Higgins Blasts Homer

In that first game, the Nats played errorless ball, if that is any consolation. They tied the score briefly at 1-1 in the second inning when Early pumped one of Newsom's pitches into the right center stands, but that contribution ended the Nats scoring for the day. The only other hits Newsom gave up were Hudson's single in the fourth and a single by Lewis in the eighth.

The Tigers put together a pair of doubles by McCoskey and Greenberg to get themselves a run in the first inning, and Higgins' homer in the second set them up in a 2-1 lead. From that point, it was simply a case of how many runs for

Yanks Rally Twice, Beat Browns, 7 to 6

Tying Run Walked Over In Ninth; Keller Hits Home Run in Eighth

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, June 15.—The Yankees beat the Browns again today, but this one was a battle all the way, the world champions finally winning, 7-6, with a two-run uprising in the ninth.

The Brownies forged into the lead in the third and held it till the eighth when the Yanks went out in front with a four-run rally built around Charley Keller's tenth home run of the season.

In their half of the eighth the Browns again took the lead when Chet Laabs delivered a pinch homer with Johnny Berardino on base.

In the ninth the Yanks filled the bases and then Jack Kramer walked Bill Dickey to force in the tying run. Joe DiMaggio scored the winning marker on Joe Gordon's long fly.

Five Doubles, Homer And Single in First Three Innings Rout Cincinnati's Star

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, June 15.—Brooklyn's marauding Dodgers shot off a murderous salvo of 14 hits today to crush the Cincinnati Reds, 11 to 6, and not only tightened their grasp on the National League lead to two full games but forced the Reds down to third place behind the surging New York Giants.

The Dodgers disposed of Bucky Walters with two three-run clusters in the first three innings and caused the willowy righthander to swallow his third consecutive defeat after winning nine games in a row at the start of the season. Five of the seven hits Walters gave were doubles and one a homer.

Carleton Routed

Cincinnati battled valiantly with an eight-hit offensive that included four home runs, two of them by Ernie Lombardi, and succeeded in routing Tex Carleton in the fourth frame, but Tot Pressnell squelched them with two-hit relief hurling for his third triumph of the season.

Although the teams have met 10 times this spring, this was the first time either had turned back the other twice in succession and it gave Brooklyn a 6-4 advantage for the season's play.

Babe Phelps and Pete Coscarart were the big guns in the Dodgers' bombardment, but Brooklyns' hits were divided seven ways. Phelps batted in four runs with a homer, a double and a single and Coscarart sparked a five-run explosion in the seventh by tripling with the bases loaded.

Walters Goes Out

Phelps' homer came with one on in the first after Brooklyn already had scored on a double, a hit batsman and a double play. In the third, Phelps doubled with two on and came home on another double by Dolph Camilli. Walters was removed for a pinch hitter in the fourth and Milt Shoffner and John Hutchings finished.

Shoffner checked the Dodgers until the seventh when Brooklyn batted around and scored five times on six hits that included Coscarart's three bagger.

Lonnie Frey homered for Cincinnati in the third and Frank McCormick and Ernie Lombardi led off with successive home runs in the fourth. When Harry Craft singled and John Rizzo doubled, Carleton gave up the ghost. Two long flies scored the two runners, and closed the gap in the score to 6-5, but thereafter Cincinnati's only run was Lombardi's second circuit clout.

The game was delayed 45 minutes by rain and the combination of uncertain weather and expectations of a sellout held the crowd to 18,135 paying customers and 5,012 boys, guests of the Dodgers.

Chicago White Sox Tie Score in Fourth But Bosox Pound Dietrich for Victory

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 15.—Rookie Herb Hash mowed the Chicago White Sox down with four hits today to give the Boston Red Sox a 5-to-2 victory and their second straight decision of the series.

A streak of wildness in the fourth inning robbed the young right-hander of a shut-out. In this frame he walked three batters and then allowed a single by Mike Tresh, which brought in the Sox's only two markers. In the last five innings Hash allowed no hits and walked only one batter.

The Red Sox went ahead in the second inning on Jimmy Foxx's home run, his fifteenth of the season and seventh of the year against the White Sox. Another homer by Ted Williams doubled Boston's lead in the fourth, but Hash's wildness tied the score before the inning was completed.

Boston, however, wasted no time moving ahead again. In the fifth Bobby Doerr singled and scored on Roger Cramer's triple. Then Cramer scored on Lou Finney's long fly. The leaders added their final run in the sixth on a single by Williams and Manager Joe Cronin's double.

Williams led Boston's eight-hit attack on Bill Dietrich with a home run and two singles. Doerr collected a double and single and Joe Kuhel, of the White Sox, got two singles off Hash.

Detroit, June 15.—The Nats, who have lost seven of their last eight games, will attempt to avert a sweep of the four-game series by the Tigers tomorrow by pitching Dutch Leonard . . . Leonard will draw Tommy Bridges as his opponent . . . Gerald Walker was treated by the Detroit club physician after being withdrawn from the first game in the second inning . . . he misjudged a fly ball and complained that a painful sinus attack was impairing his vision . . . his strikeout in his only trip to the plate was additional evidence . . . There was nothing lucky about Higgins' home run in the second inning of the first game, except for the fact that Jake Early lost a chance to retire him when he lost Higgins' foul pop on the previous strike in the glare of the high sun . . . Sammy West damaged his throwing hand while leaping against the rightfield screen for Sullivan's triple in the first game and repaired to the bench for repairs . . . Rudy York beat out a bunt to Lewis in the second game, and was Lewis surprised? . . . he was playing almost in left field at the time . . . Newsom was thoroughly enjoying the discomfiture of his ex-pals while pitching his three-hitter in the first game . . . he strutted all over the premises and grinned impishly on second base after hitting a double that drove in two runs . . . Nats Lose Two To Tigers the Tigers. They scored in all of the first seven innings and just missed tying a record when they failed to score in their last turn at bat.

The Tigers' big blow-off in the first game occurred in the fourth inning, into which they packed five hits and four runs. Sullivan tripled to right, and Newsom scored him with a single to right. Bartell singled to left, McCosky beat out an infield hit, Gehringer drew a walk, and Greenberg drove in the third and fourth runs of the inning with a single to left.

For every hit he allowed the Nats, Newsom himself drove in a Tiger run. With his single in the fourth and his double that scored two runners in the fifth, he accounted for three Detroit runs. Montaguado relieved Hudson in the fourth, and the Tigers' last five runs were scored against him.

Nats Miss the Boat

That second game was even more futile. The Nats made two hits in the first inning when Case and Lewis led off with singles, and they didn't get another one off Gornica until West singled with two out in the eighth. Bonura singled in the ninth for the Nats' fourth and last hit, and their last chance to avoid a shutout disappeared when Bonura absurdly attempted to score from third while Gornica was throwing out Travis at first.

The Nats missed the boat shockingly in the first inning of that second game. They filled the bases with none out on the blows of Case and Lewis and a walk to Welaj, but they couldn't score. Bonura lined out to Bartell, Early popped up to Bartell, and Gehringer made a clever stop of Travis' grounder behind second for the third out.

Haynes held the Tigers in check with one run until the fourth inning, when his own wild throw on Greenberg's blast into the box put Greenberg on third. Then York and Campbell singled and the Tigers came up with two runs and a 3-0 lead. They rocked him for two more runs in the sixth when Campbell tripled with two on base, and they knocked him loose from two more in the seventh when York and Greenberg pounded out doubles.

You wouldn't have been proud of the Nats today.

Macks Defeat Indians, 7-4; Harder Victim

A's Score All Their Runs Off Veteran; Macks Square Series

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, June 15.—The Philadelphia Athletics defeated Cleveland, 7-4, today with Al Brancato knocking in four of the runs and Wally Moses two more.

The A's, evening the series at one victory each, got all their runs off Mel Harder in the seven innings the Indian veteran pitched.

Three of the tallies came in the fifth on four hits, including doubles by Dick Seibert and Brancato. Moses' homer highlighted the seventh, which produced the A's other four runs. A high throw by Beau Bell helped send Hander to the showers in that inning.

Joe Dobson finished for the Tribe and kept the Mackmen under control. Successive doubles by Roy Weatherly and Rollie Hemsley, followed by Bell's single, gave the Indians two runs in the first at the expense of Bucky Ross, but thereafter the Mackian right-hander was more effective even though he gave up 11 hits to the 10 the Tribe garnered.

Cubs Hammer Four Pitchers, Beat Bees, 11-5

Larry French Hangs Up Eighth Victory As Mates Sling Foes

By the Associated Press

Boston, June 15.—Whaling four Boston pitchers for 13 hits, the Chicago Cubs trounced the Bees 11-5 today for the eighth time in nine games this season and gave Pitcher Larry French his eighth win of the season.

Two big innings—the second and fourth—provided most of the visitors' runs. Bill Posedel started on the mound for Boston and was retired after yielding six hits in the first outburst. His successor, George Barnicle, yielded in the fourth to Joe Callahan, who weathered the storm until the sixth, when Dick Coffman took over and finished.

With the bases loaded in the Chicago half of the second, after French singled, Stan Hack doubled and Phil Cavaretta was hit by a pitched ball, Jimmy Gleason cleared the bases by smashing a double to center, and then was brought home himself by Bill Nicholson's triple.

In the fourth, with the bases again full, Nicholson was walked, forcing in Hack, Bill Herman brought home Gleason and Cavaretta with a double Dom Dallessandro filed scoring Nicholson and Al Todd's single brought home Herman with the inning's fifth run.

Sibbi Sisti was the chief consolation for the Bees. Sisti rapped a triple and two singles to score two of Boston's runs and drive in two others, and then engineered the game's only double play in the eighth.

Straight Deal Involving No Cash Announced; Philadelphia Outfielder Happy Over Move; Two Other Phils Are Sold

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, June 15.—Gerry Nugent, president of the Phillies, announced tonight the club has traded Outfielder Morrie Arnovich to the Cincinnati Reds in exchange for Johnny Rizzo.

"It was a straight deal with no cash involved," Nugent said. "We feel that Rizzo is faster and has more power than Arnovich."

Arnovich led the National League in batting for more than half of the 1939 season and finished the year with a .324 average. This year he has been in a slump. His present average is .286.

"I feel great," Arnovich exclaimed when he learned he had been traded.

Rizzo broke into the National League two years ago with the Pittsburgh Pirates. He was traded to Cincinnati early this year by Pittsburgh's new manager, Frankie Frisch.

ProOtro earlier announced that Hershel Martin, outfielder, and Del Young, infielder, had been sold to Jersey City of the International League. The amount of money involved was not disclosed.

Giants Defeat Bucs; Go Into Second Place

Schumacher, Dunning Star in 12-to-1 Rout Of Pittsburgh Pirates

New York, June 15.—With Pitcher Hal Schumacher and Catcher Harry Danning providing all the fireworks, the New York Giants went into second place in the National League today on the wings of a 12-1 shellacking of the Pittsburgh Pirates.

The victory, coupled with Cincinnati's loss to Brooklyn, gave the Giants second place by .014 percentage points.

Schumacher spun a five-hitter, fanned seven and had a perfect day at the plate—three singles and two walks while Dunning hit for the cycle, getting a single, double, triple and homer in his last four times at the plate.

The Giants piled up a total of 17 hits off three Pirate hurlers for their second best batting performance of the season.

Royalty II Captures Tricolor at Upperville Horse Show

Mrs. Haggin's To Victory Wins Reserve

Victory Amasses 13 Points in 2-Day Event; Lipscomb's Entries Show Well

By Anne Hagner

Upperville, Va., June 15.—Following up the string of Virginia championships he took last year, Robert E. Waters' Royalty II climaxed his career with the tricolor of the Upperville Colt and Horse Show, which ended near here today.

With Edward Barker and Morris Clark alternating in the saddle, the big Pennsylvania-owned bay won the half-bred hunters' class yesterday and several good ribbons today to qualify for the championship, which he took with 13 points.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Haggin Perry, who brought only two horses from their extensive Cobham (Va.) stables, won their second reserve championship in two days as To Victory followed closely behind Royalty in the title race. Yesterday the Perrys' Zarp annexed the 3-year-old reserve to Mrs. D. N. Lee's Spanish Spear, after some nice victories.

Won at Devon Show

To Victory, steady winner at Washington, Wilmington and Devon last month, is a dark brown daughter of St. James-Marching On. Many experts say that the big mare is as fine a hunter type as Scotchwood, recently sold by Mr. and Mrs. Perry for a tremendous sum.

The lead-in events of the early morning, ranking even higher in importance than the championship in the opinion of hunt country fans, saw W. H. Lipscomb win first and second in the class for yearling colts. The blue went to a big chestnut by Psychic Bid, with outstanding quality and substance. The other Lipscomb entry, a handsome bay son of Granville, is out of the mare Duration, who produced the top-priced yearling at Saratoga in 1938.

The 2-year-old class, which had nearly every prominent horse fancier in Virginia hanging on the rail, went to Springsbury Farm's Traumertan, by the well-known stallion, Traumer. Sixteen entries turned out for the event, and the quality, although not the best that Upperville has seen recently, was good enough to have Judge Louis Leith deliberating for nearly an hour.

San Utar Filly Is Victor

Among the thoroughbred yearling fillies, A. M. Hirch's chestnut daughter of San Utar-Sun Slave defeated Nancy Hanna's Washington-owned chestnut by Flag Pole and Mrs. Elizabeth Whitney's filly by Royal Falcon.

Although the championship winners were fairly consistent performers, they were closely pursued by Frederick Warburg's good working hunter, Battle Day, and Horace Moffett's Sally Twink, which took the Founders' Cup yesterday and the touch-and-out today. Springsbury's Ginnico likewise was high among the ribbon-winners.

Only three stallions were entered in the usually well-filled event for hunter-type stud horses, and the blue went to Charles V. B. Cushman's bay, Double Scotch, a 6-year-old son of Stimulus. Second went to the Peach brothers' Gray Coat, who won over Ridgeley Nicholas' Bad Bill.

Sports Notables Pay Last Tribute To Noble Kizer

By the Associated Press

Lafayette, Ind., June 15.—Sports notables and coaches from throughout the Middle West paid final tribute today to Noble Earl Kiser, athletic director of Purdue University.

Funeral services for Kizer, who came to Purdue 15 years ago after an outstanding football career at Notre Dame, were held in Central Presbyterian Church.

The cortege, with police escort, drove slowly to Plymouth, Kizer's home town, where graveside services were held in Oak Hill Cemetery.

Kizer died Thursday. He was 40 years old.

Elis Keep National Championship by 15-to-5 Runaway

By The Associated Press

Westwood, Mass., June 15.—Paced by Bill Chisholm, who drove home seven goals, Yale's veteran polo ists retained their national outdoor intercollegiate polo championship today, defeating a sophomore Princetown quartet, 15 to 5, in a runaway game.

Undefeated in spring competition, the Elis won their ninth title and retained the Gerry Cup.

The Yale riders outmaneuvered their rivals at every turn on the lush turf of Forbes Field and drove in three goals in the opening chucker.

Chisholm accounted for the opening score after the first minute of play had passed. George Mead made it 2-0, then Chisholm tallied again. The Yale star put the game in ice with a brilliant exhibition of riding in the second chukker, thrice taking the ball after the throw-in and blasting it between the posts. At the end of the first half, Yale led, 10 to 2.

Princeton desperately attempted to come from behind in the last three chukkers, but the Yale riders matched them score for score and added two extra goals in the final minutes to win going away.

Trans-Miss. Golf President Named

St. Louis, June 15 (AP).—Mrs. C. R. McCubbin, of Kansas City, was elected president of the Trans-Mississippi Golf Association at business sessions today.

Mrs. F. B. Shaw, Denver, was named first vice president; Mrs. Henry S. Nollen, Des Moines, second vice president; and Mrs. F. H. Millard, St. Louis, third vice president.

The executive secretaryship went to Mrs. Holbrook T. Ashton, of St. Louis, retiring president.

The 1941 tournament was awarded to River Oaks Country Club, of Houston, Tex. Denver, Chicago and Des Moines made bids for the 1924 event.

Last year's all-Maryland champion, War Krem, could only win three third places today.

In the more than 20 classes of races, about 80 horses competed.

Mrs. Scott's Sapelo Wins Hunt 'Chase

Favorite Defeats Cartermoor in 1st Card With Mutuels

Roslyn, N. Y., June 15.—Mrs. Marion DuPont Scott's Sapelo, stablemate of the famed Battleship which a few years ago topped the Grand National field at Aintree, whipped a stylish field in the Bowman Steeplechase, top event on the United Hunts card over the Charles Hickox acreage today.

The 6-year-old son of Son O'Battle was given a magnificent ride by Willie Jones and thoroughly vindicated the favoritism bestowed on him by the socialite throng of 5,000.

This was the first hunt meeting held under the New York mutual law and was a great success, although the "handle" was only $15,589. Rain curtailed the wagering on the first two races. But when the sun baked at the start of the Bowman, a 2-mile brush affair, there was a rush for the windows.

Sapelo was rated in the early rush, with Jones keeping the horse in hand until four jumps from home. He merely sat there while Yemassee and Big Rebel cut out the early pace, and made his move coming around the turn into the stretch. There was no argument. Cartermoor, out of the Holmdel Stable, lasted to take place money and He Goes, entered by the Log Cabin Stud, wound up third. Sapelo paid $4.10 for a $2 ticket.

Maurice C. Clifford, jr., 2263 Sherman avenue northwest, Washington, received full numerals for membership on the varsity track team, and George V. Pope, Fort Belvoir, Va., reecived a college letter for membership on the varsity tennis team.

Vitt Blue Over Players' 2d Demand

Subdued Manager Unconsoled by Boss' Investigation Promise

By the United Press

Cleveland, Ohio, June 15.—Rocked by a second demand of players for his removal, Manager Oscar Vitt of the Cleveland Indians shook his head disconsolately tonight apparently stunned by the action.

The move left him a quiet and subdued man. Gone were the fiery, volatile characteristics which marked his actions on the diamond.

Even the fact that Club President Alva Bradley had promised a complete investigation of the players' grievances and that he tended to "lean toward Vitt" did nothing to dissipate the Californian's gloom.

The blast from the players today, including Bob Feller, the Indians strike-out ace, seemed to diminish the chances of Vitt's remaining as manager.

Feller Joins Meeting

Twelve players—including such stars as Feller, Hal Trosky, Rollie Hemsley, Jeff Heath, Ken Keltner, Mel Harder, Oscar Grimes and Sammy Hale—presented Bradley with a list of grievances and demanded Vitt's removal.

They charged among other things that Vitt had been openly contemptuous of their efforts, sneered at them and by his actions kept them in a nervous, jittery state.

Feller, sincere in his statement, was anxious that his position in the situation was not misunderstood.

"I don't want anybody to think I'm temperamental," he said. "I'm not. I always give everything I had. But there is too much nervousness in this team right now."

Players Won't Continue

The players felt that even with Bradley favorably disposed toward Vitt, they couldn't carry on under the circumstances.

"How can we go on now that this has been brought to light," one veteran said. "I know that I could never feel the same toward Vitt and that he could never feel the same toward me."

The manager felt a faint hope that he could ride out the storm of dissension after Bradley indicated that the club would go on as usual pending completion of the investigation. The president denied that Vitt had offered to resign.

Trosky Says Team Needs New Manager

Des Moines, Iowa, June 15 (AP).—The Register tonight quoted First Baseman Hal Trosky as saying in a telephone interview that:

"The Cleveland baseball team needs a new manager."

Trosky added, "The Register said, that "Oscar Vitt has more nerve than any man I know in trying to stay in power when he realizes that every man on the club feels a change should be made."

Trosky, one of 12 players who asked President Alva Bradley for a change in managers, returned to Norway, Iowa, to attend funeral services for his mother.

Precedent Broken By Gift for Yank Rookie Pitcher

St. Louis, June 15 (AP).—When Marvin Breuer, rookie hurler for the New York Yankees, is honored at tomorrow's double-header with the Browns he won't receive the usual gift from fans.

Instead of a traveling bag he will be presented a set of precision drawing instruments.

Breuer, an engineer during the winter, is a graduate of Missouri School of Mines, at Rolla, Mo., which is sending a delegation to make the presentation.

Helen Jacobs Wins Eastern States

Haverford, Pa., June 15 (AP).—Helen Hull Jacobs of Berkeley, Calif., added the Pennsylvania and Eastern States women's tennis championship today by defeating Eunice Dean, of San Antonio, Tex., 6—1, 6—2, in the finals of the forty-fifth annual tournament.

Arlington Park's 30-Day Race Meeting Will Open Saturday

$450,000 in Prize Money to Be Offered; First Feature to Be $4,500 Inaugural Handicap

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Ill., June 15.—Arlington Park's 30 days of racing will be launched a week from today. Once again this race meeting will present, with traditional pomp and pageantry, seven rich stakes in a setting of 1,000 acres of Illinois pioneer land.

Gaining prestige under the new group of directors headed by John D. Allen, prominent Chicago sportsman, the Arlington Park Jockey Club will distribute $450,000 in prize money to horsemen during the 30 days.

Embracing a new ideal of cooperation to raise racing's popularity in this area, Arlington's leaders have joined hands with Washington Park, which follows for 31 days through Labor Day, to present a coordinated program of stakes and features that will give horsemen more than $900,000 in 61 days of superb turf action.

A record field of between 15 and 18 of the best sprinters in training here and a notable string of challengers from other points is expected to go to the post in the $5,500 gross Inaugural Handicap, the 7-furlong opening day feature.

More than a score of probable starters in the Inaugural are training now for the race, including the English stakes winner Olympus, Benjam, Easy Mon, Star Chance, Taxes, Chance Ray, Yale o' Nine, Montsin, Trysak, Hermina B., King's Blue, Tiger, No Competition, Pernie, Connaught, Marfou, Commendador II, Vejecte, Chi, Joe Schenck, Rifted Clouds and Technician.

Ready to invade Arlington Park for the 30 days are nationally renowned racing establishments including William Woodward's Belair Stud, Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, Calumet Farm, Woolford Farm, the Greentree Stable and three other branches of the Whitney family, Col. E. R. Bradley, Joseph E. Widener, Marshall Field, Willis Sharpe Kilmer, Milky Way Farm, Victor Emmanuel, Valdina Farms and others.

Roller Club Gives Exhibition Tonight

The Capitol Roller Club of America will present an array of United States championship skaters tonight in an exhibition scheduled for 8:30 o'clock.

Johnsen and Lynch Win City of Washington Doubles Title

Dick Murphy, Al Smith Bow In Finals

Defending Team Easy Winner at Edgemoor; Welsh Will Seek 3d Singles Title Today

By Jack Munhall.

A perfect balance of spectacular youth and wily veteran, Davie Johnsen supplied the thrills and Hugh Lynch the steady tennis yesterday as they defended their City of Washington doubles title before a large gallery at Edgemoor Club.

Johnsen, 19-year-old George Washington University student, and the seasoned Lynch, a former Princeton University star now practicing law here, overpowered the fourth seeded team of Alphonso Smith and Dick Murphy in the finals. The victory was in straight sets, 7-5, 6-4, 8-6.

Johnsen and Lynch, top-seeded on the strength of their victories last year in this tournament and in the Middle Atlantic tennis championships, reached the finals earlier in the afternoon by blasting aside third-ranked Jimmy Farrin and Bill Howard, 6-4, 6-1.

"Dark Horses" Beaten

Smith and Murphy, unseeded, won their semifinal match even more easily, eliminating the "dark-horse" combination of Bill Breese and Ed Mather, upset conquerors of Barney Welsh and Dooly Mitchell, 6—2, 6—0.

Breese and Mather were powerless to combat the deadly short-court game of Murphy and Smith, who are masterful volleyers. These same forecourt tactics availed Smith and Murphy little against Lynch and Johnsen, however, and the result of their match was hardly in doubt after the opening set, when the challengers blew leads of 2—0, 4—2 and 5—3 and failed to take advantage of 8-set points while the champions were rallying their forces for a winning rally which carried four consecutive games.

Though obviously disheartened by this setback, Murphy and Smith continued to offer stubborn opposition, although they could not begin to match the brand of play with which they were confronted. Johnsen, snapping out of the slump which saw him eliminated early in the singles of this tournament and in the Intercollegiate qualifications at Annapolis, never was more accurate on his overhead smashes. His crashing play, coupled with the near-flawless shot making of Lynch, who committed an amazing small number of errors, formed a combination that seems destined to rule over District doubles for some years to come.

A Bitter Battle

Each set was bitterly fought but though Murphy and Smith often had the lead you somehow could sense that the advantages would be short-lived, as they were. Smith and Murphy held a 2-1 lead in the second set only to fall behind at 3-2 and never catch up. And in the third and last set they were unable to protect a 3-1 edge in games.

In the second set, however, they proved their hearts by fighting off three set points in the eighth game when trailing 5-3 and rallying to pull to 4-5 before Johnsen held his service to close out.

The third set was the closest, a seesaw affair in which the count was deadlocked four times, at 3—3, 4—4, 5—5 and 6—6. Smith and Murphy held the lead at 7—6, but it was dynamited from under them by one of the sporadic barrage of placements Johnsen was unleashing at the most timely moments.

The tournament will be climaxed at 3 o'clock this afternoon when Barney Welsh seeks to become the first player ever to win the singles championship three times. Welsh's final-round opponent will be the unseeded but highly dangerous Murphy, who en route to the title match bumped off Defending Champion Davie Johnsen and second-seeded Lynch.

In spite of Murphy's fine form of late, Welsh will rule an odds-on favorite with most of the regular spectators who by now have become to believe that no one can conquer Barney on the clay courts here.

Wrestlers Return To Turner's Arena; May Be Finale

Promoter Joe Turner will give up outdoor rassle enterprises and take his groan acts back into his W street arena this week in what may be the rassles' last stand in Washington of the season.

A double feature program with Gino Martinelli, local glamour boy No. 1 just now, meeting the Swedish Angel in one of the matches, is Thursday night's dish. Jack Hader is expected to perform in the other. If the matches don't draw the fans, Turner plans to close up for the summer.

Cornell, Washington Favored in 'Keepsie

Veteran Rivermen Predict Race Between East And West in Annual Race Tuesday; Columbia In Dark Horse Role; Navy May Surprise

By International News Service

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., June 15.—It's strictly East vs. West again in the intercollegiate rowing regatta here Tuesday.

It's strictly the big red boat from Cornell and the huskies of Washington, with fortune smiling on the crew which is lucky enough to be hot on race day.

So predict the veteran rivermen who for decades have sat in the sun on the Hudson's banks and watched the slim, shiny shells go knifing by. They have appraised all of the eight crews which have been training off Poughkeepsie's shores. They have closely followed Navy, Columbia and Princeton; they have focused their binoculars on Wisconsin, California and Syracuse.

But the ancient watermen still say Cornell or Washington.

On the records, these two boats which have emerged champions on their respective coasts are reigning favorites. They appear to have the balance of power.

Columbia, a Dark Horse

But more than one dissenter in the lobby of Poughkeepsie's historic Nelson House—since 1826 the meeting place of the riverbank and ferryboat volunteer coaches association—is touting a dark horse.

Columbia for instance.

Nobody will deny that the light blues look like the best boatload that Hubert Glendon has brought up from Morningside Heights in many a year. This crew has polish, range and a pretty good wallop.

And, as ever, the cry rises from up the middlestream headquarters across Krum Elbow——

"Don't overlook Navy."

The warning is not as loud this year, as Buck Walsh's Middies have yet to win a race, but you can still hear it in the cool of the evening when the day's training chores are over.

Then there is Syracuse, Ned Ten Eyck's smart-looking outfit, which has slipped over a couple of sensational time trials. This boat is a tremendously high-stroking crew which has been sliding by the rival boathouses rowing 36 and spacing well. Under right conditions, this rangy aggregation will be a threat.

Princeton Is Smooth

As for Princeton, there is no smoother crew on the river than Fred Sputhi's light, smart Tigers. Observers doubt that Princeton has the stamina for a 4-mile pull, distance rowing being new to the boys from Jersey.

Little hope is held out for Wisconsin. The Badgers look pretty and row well together, but the power isn't there.

Regardless of what the dopesters think about the probable winner, everybody agrees that Poughkeepsie is likely to see the greatest 4-mile marathon in many a year. The strength of the Eastern boats has whipped up an unusual amount of interest in the event, and a whooping big crowd is expected.

All of the crews were expected to indulge in light rowing today, for the hard, grueling pulls are all behind them.

But on the street corners uptown and on the river front you can hear the warning:

The boat which beats Cornell and Washington will win the silverware.

New York Girl Paces Field on Clay Courts

Helen Bernhard, Only Seeded Player in Action, Wins Opener

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 15.—Helen Bernhard, of New York, only seeded player in the women's or men's divisions to see action, advanced easily today to the second round of the National Clay Courts Tennis Tournament at the River Forest Club.

Miss Bernhard, seeded second, disposed of Helen Bartavis, Chicago, 6-1, 6-1, on the opening day's program.

Seymour Greenberg, Chicago's only entrant with even an outside chance for honors, eliminated Marvin Carlock, Los Angeles, 6-1, 6-2, 6-4. Greenberg is the Chicago City and Big Ten singles champion.

John Shostrom, Chicago, another Big Ten star, advanced with a straight-set victory over Marshall Chambers, Cincinnati, 6-2, 6-3, 6-2; and William Talbert, Cincinnati, defeated John Foreman, Chicago, 6-2, 6-1, 6-2. Jack Kramer, of Belvidere Gardens, Cal., eliminated Ward Parker, St. Louis, and Max Davidson, Chicago, survived in a match with Milton Rushi, Milwaukee.

In the women's division, first to take part in the clay courts program, Mercelna Parker, St. Louis, defeated Jean Mourek, Berwyn, Ill., and Margaret Stiel, Oak Park, Ill., defeated Geraldine Leitner, Toledo.

Topflight performers in both divisions are scheduled to make their bow tomorrow. Top-seeded Bobby Riggs, national champion, meets Tom Brown, of San Francisco, and fourth-seeded Welby Van Horn, Los Angeles, faces Bob Kamrath, Austin, Tex.

Alice Marble, national champion and seeded first among the women, engages Kitty Lawrence, Winnetka, Ill., in the first round.

Two Teams Tied For Tennis Lead

George Washington, with a victory in its only match, is the percentage leader of the Women's Tennis League, according to latest figures, but the real leaders are Nationals and Wardman with six triumphs against two losses.

In the outstanding match of last week's competition youthful Margo Lee handed Charlotte Decker a 6—4, 6—2 defeat.

Garfield Holds Home-Coming June 29; Honor Miss Sheridan

Annual Day Brings Many 'Old Timers' Back to Childhood Playground

Homecoming Day at Garfield Playground June 29 is expected to draw more than the usual number of "Old Timers" back for a day of play this year.

They'll all be back to honor Miss Evelyn Sheridan, the popular director who, only a few weeks ago, staged a miraculous recovery from an operation which had her at death's door.

Miss Sheridan has been head of the Second and F Streets Southeast Playground for more than 20 years, and among her "children" are listed some of the District's outstanding citizens. Almost every profession from medicine to truck driving will be represented.

Among the former Garfield Playground inhabitants are: Rolland Atkins, of Agriculture; Joe Cannon, of Agriculture; Harry Smith, ball player now with Newark; Reverend Fathers James Cowhig, Francis Cornell, Paul Repetti and George Gingras; Reverend Elmer Kimmell; Drs. Jamie Kane, Samuel Zola, Ralph Monaco and Luther Gray; Benja McCullough, of the Library of Congress, and Ed Cuthbertson, of the Heurich Brewery.

King Gives Sporting Guns for Defense

London, June 15.—King George VI, in response to the appeal for firearms with which to equip Britain's 150,000 home defense volunteers, has handed over a number of sporting guns to the military authorities.

In making this announcement tonight, Sir Edward Grigg, undersecretary for war, said that he knew other Britons would follow the King's example.

Big Ten Track Hopes in Meet On Coast Dim

Midwest Conference Stars Clash With Pacific Team Monday

By the Associated Press

Evanston, Ill., June 15.—The Western Conference still is looking for its first dual meet track and field victory over the Pacific Coast Conference, and the goal seems about as far away as it ever did.

The picked squads from the two conferences will compete for the fourth straight year next Monday night on the Northwestern University track in a twilight meet starting at 6 p. m. (E. S. T.).

In the three previous meets the West Coast galaxy more than doubled the score on its Midwest rivals, and this season has a better than outside chance of doing it again. Last year the margin was 94 1-3 to 36 2-3. The Big Ten squad never has scored more than 46 points and its rivals have always scored 62 or more.

Two Stars Return

Each squad is composed of the one-two-three finishers in the respective conference meets. However, Indiana's Roy Cochran, hurdler and junior-miler, and Michigan's Ralph Schwartzkopf, distance star who missed the Big Ten meet because of injury and illness, were added to the Western Conference squad.

The Big Ten's best chances of taking top honors are in the discus, 120-yard high hurdles, 220-yard low hurdles, 2-mile and half-mile. One of the most attractive features of the meet should be the sprint battles between Clyde Jeffrew, of Stanford, and Myron Piker, of Northwestern, in the 100 and between Jeffrey and Alan Smith of Michigan in the 220.

Archie Harris, of Indiana, figures to win the discus, but the horse squad isn't expected to cut much ice in other field events. A survey of comparative performances reveals the West Coast lads have a fine chance to sweep the pole vault, broad jump and javelin, as well as win the shot put and high jump.

Spectacular Race

The half-mile promises a spectacular race between Washington State's Bill Dale, Indiana's Campbell Kane and Wisconsin's Ed Buxton, Big Ten champion, with the winner likely to be any one of the three.

The Big Ten's point-making hopes will be greatly boosted if Cochran has recovered sufficiently from a leg injury to give his best in the 220 hurdles. Schwartzkopf, likewise, needs his top form to take the 2-mile from Dixie Garner, of Washington State, and Leroy Weed, of Southern California.

Grant Defeats Henderson for Southern Title

Bitsy Wins 9-7, 6-2, 6-4; His Ninth Crown; Malley Is Loser

By The Associated Press

Charlotte, N. C., June 15.—Little Bryan Grant dug deeply into his bag of tricks today and pulled out a 9—7, 6—2, 6—4 decision from Archie Henderson, of Chapel Hill, N. C., in the finals of the Southern tennis tournament.

"The Atlanta atom" was too fast for the unranked Henderson and wore down the game University of North Carolina graduate student in the second set. Henderson spurted again in the final round but found Grant too much for him. It was Grant's ninth Southern singles title.

Henderson went into the finals with a victory over Gardner Malley, of Miami, Fla., and Grant moved up with a win over Billie Gillespie, of Miami.

Girl Track Star Fast Enough to Out-Do Rabbit

Scottsbluff, Nebr. (AP).—Fast as a rabbit doesn't describe 19-year-old Dorothy Kaufman, track star from McGrew. She's faster.

Dorothy "took a fancy" to a rabbit hopping over the fields and decided she wanted it. She raced it for 2 miles and when she finally captured the bunny its tongue was hanging out from exhaustion.

Responding to praise, Dorothy said modestly:

"It was only a half-grown rabbit."

Arlingtonian Enters Army Tennis Finals

Cadet Tindall Plays Lieut. Muehleisen in Championship Round

By the Associated Press

West Point, N. Y., June 15.—Cadet Richard G. Tindall, of Arlington, Va., the Army's No. 1 seeded player, and Lieut. Dolf Muehleisen, of Mitchell Field, Long Island, advanced to the finals of the All-Army tennis tournment today. Lieuts. Russell and Muehleisen and Cadets Tindall and Evans reached the doubles final.

Tindall, defending singles champion, turned back Harry W. Heffner, Army football star from Fortuill, Okla., 4—6, 6—3, 6—4, after consistently going to the net to break the latter's steady play.

Lieut. Muehleisen, 1938 Army champion, defeated Lieut. Samuel H. Webster, former Cadet team captain, 6—3, 6—2, 3—6, 6—3.

Top seeded doubles pairs went according to form, Lieuts. Muehleisen and Russell, of Mitchell Field, defeating Lieuts. Edward McCutcheon, of Fort Belvoir, Va., and Wilmot O'Connell, Charlottesville, Va., 6—2, 6—3 and 6—1. Cadets Tindall and A. J. Evans, No. 1 seeded doubles, broke through in a five-game string to defeat Heffner and Webster, 7—5, 4—6, 6—4, 6—4, 6—2.

Park Service Asks Climbers to Register

Watson Ahead In 10-Event Decathlon Meet

Former Michigan Star Sets 100-Meter Mark In Taking Big Lead

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, June 15.—Big Bill Watson, erstwhile University of Michigan track ace, took a commanding lead today in the two-day, ten-event National Decathlon competition.

The Negro star, whose main strength lies in the field events, not only scored his expected triumphs in the broad jump and shot put, but also turned in a new National Decathalon mark of 10.8 seconds for the 100-meter dash to win three of the day's five trials.

His torrid pace gave him 4,281 points at the half-way mark, against 3,823 for Lee Todd, 25-year-old University of Colorado graduate student, and 3,821 for Joe Scott, of Western Reserve University, the defending champion.

Record Counts Heavily

By throwing the 16-pound shot 50 feet 1½ inches, Watson picked up 883 of a possible 1,000 points, and his winning broad jump lead of 24 feet ¾ inch, gave him another 919. The 100-meter record was good for 902 more and allowed him to fall behind in the high jump and 440-meter dash and still lead the field by a large margin.

Todd turned in the best performance in the 440-meter event, winning in 50.1 seconds, while Scott cleared the bar at 6 feet in the high jump to tie for first with Uyval C. Jones, Detroit track star from Wayne University, who was fourth with 3,736 points.

Can Afford to Slip

Watson's success today made it possible for him to slip a little tomorrow in the hurdles, pole vault, discus, javelin and 1,500-meter run and still better the world record decathlon performance of 7,900 points chalked up by Glenn Morris in the 1936 Olympic Games at Berlin. The discus is one of Watson's specialties, while Scott, who won in 1938 and 1939 without Watson in the field, likes the pole vault and hurdles.

Here's how other competitors stood at the end of today's grind:

Alphonso Gavrilavicz, Michigan Normal Club, 3,354; Michael Scheib, Michigan State College, 3,778; Leslie Nelson, Kent State, 3,772; Ed Moisio, Ashtabula, Ohio, 3,120; Fred Schleicher, unattached, 2,978. Jack Kroecker, unattached, withdrew because of a pulled tendon, and Charles Horvarth, of Northwestern, likewise withdrew.

Joe Hunt Wins District College Tennis Title

Midshipman Defeats Vanderbilt Ace for 2d Time at Annapolis

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., June 15.—Joe Hunt, of the Naval Academy, defeated Joe Davis, Vanderbilt ace, for the third district intercollegiate tennis title today in a blistering five-set match.

The match score was 6—2, 3—6, 6—4, 7—9, 6—4.

It was Hunt's second victory over the Tennessean but the Davis Cup player had to produce the best tennis of his career to take the challenger.

Davis, who fell before the midshipman three years ago in a Southern tournament, came with a rush after dropping the first two sets and took the next two by simply overpowering the hard-firing Hunt.

Davis was obviously nervous during the first sets but steadied as the battle wore on. He took the first four games in the third set as he hit the pace that carried him in the past to the Southeastern Conference championship.

The match got started shortly after 3 p. m. and required 3 hours and 15 minutes.

Detroit Lions Are Building For '40 Season

Mandel, New Owner, Plans to Take 70 Men To Training Camp

Special Dispatch to The Post

Detroit, June 15.—Under the direction of Fred L. Mandel, jr., and Coach Potsy Clark the task of rebuilding the Detroit club in the National Football League is progressing so efficiently that 30 Lions already have signed 1940 contracts.

"We're not thinking in championship terms at present," Mandel said in reviewing the Lions' roster to date. "Our sole objective is to develop a team that will at least hold its own in the league. We're building for the future. With that thought in mind we'll probably take more than 70 players to training camp on August 14. In the group will be only 12 veterans.

Since his purchase of the Detroit club last January, Mandel has devoted his entire time helping Clark negotiate trades and otherwise improve the Lions. Previously his youthful owner's football interest was strictly that of an enthusiastic fan.

Asked if he thought he would regret surrendering his position as a 50-yard-line customer by becoming a league magnate Mandel replied:

"Perhaps, if the Lions should drop one of their crucial games by a narrow score. But, it's swell being associated with the fastest growing sport in the world."

Like thousands of other American businessmen Mandel has long been an ardent football fan. For years he divided his time in the autumn by attending outstanding college games on Saturdays and National League contests on Sundays. Distance meant little to the young Chicago business executive on his choice of college games. Last season he saw Cornell play Ohio State at Columbus, Ohio; Tulane oppose L. S. U. at New Orleans and Notre Dame-Army at New York.

Memphis Pitcher Gets 3 Victories In Just 3 Innings

By the Associated Press

Memphis, Tenn.—In three days Bob Joyce, right-handed hurler with Memphis of the Southern Association, wrote into the records three victories. And he was on the mound just three innings!

Joyce hurled two-thirds of an inning against New Orleans, an inning and a third against the same team the following day and one inning against Little Rock the next day.

He got credit for three victories in his role as relief hurler. He allowed no hits nor runs and only one base on balls.

Joyce was with the Philadelphia Athletics in 1939.

About Boats By Andrews

How many yachtsmen in these parts, equipped with excellent charts of all adjacent waters, have nevertheless gone aground now and then?

ANDREWS

Despite daily weather reports in the newspapers and twice-daily weather broadcasts by our friends, the Coast Guard, how many have been caught in the sudden squalls for which this region is famous?

What with all the present aids to navigation, there probably is not a yachtsman but who has wondered betimes how they made out in the old days, in the days before internal combustion engines, in the days before steam and, for that matter, back in the days when white men first turned the prows of their brave little vessels into Chesapeake Bay and its hundred arms and estuaries. That there was such a time is obvious and what they did then is a matter of record.

Take that June day, for instance, 332 years ago, when Capt. John Smith and a little band of inquisitive Englishmen set out from Jamestown, Va., on a voyage of "discoverie" up the Bay. Who they were and what happened to them has been preserved for us in the writings of several of that crew.

There were 15 men, including Smith, and they took along with them "in an open Barge of two tunnes burthen" one "Walter Russell, Doctor of Physicke, James Read black Smith, Richard Keale Fishmonger and Jonas Profit fisher," as individuals whose services might be needful.

They found the same Chesapeake Bay you are familiar with, and if you don't believe it, read this:

"Passing alongst the Coast, searching every Inlet, and Bay fit for Harbours and Habitations, seeing many Iles in the midst of the Bay, we bore up for them, but ere we could attaine them, such an extreame gust of Winde, Raine, Thunder and Lightning happened, that with great danger (not accepted the unmercifull raging of that Ocean-like water."

That's the same Bay, all right, and the same weather, and the "Iles" they saw were what now are Tangier and Smith. They got to them the next day, the storm having blown itself out, and found no water, so went on up to "the River Wighcocomoco." There they found fresh water and started back across the Bay.

But "in crossing over from the Mayne to other Iles, the winde and waters so much increased with Thunder, Lightning and Raine, that our fore-mast blew overboard, and such mightie waves over-wrought us in that small Barge, that with great labour, wee kept her from sinking by freeing out the water: two days wee were inforced to inhabit these uninhabited Iles, which (for the extremitie of Gusts, Thunder, Raine, Stormes, and ill weather) we called Limbo. Repairing our fore-sayle with our shirts, we set sayle for the Mayne ...."

Hardly as they were, they got their fill of Chesapeake weather and before they fetched the mouth of the Potomac, 14 days after leaving Jamestown, they were all seasick. Yet, exhorted by Smith, they kept on until:

"The sixteenth of June we fell with the River of Patawomack: fearre being gone and our men recreated, we were all contented to take some paines to know the name of this nine miles broad River."

That is how the first white men sounded Smith Point and pulled their way, without the prestige of a chart, across to Point Lookout and up to Piney Point. Later they went on up to Little Falls, but that is another story.

It will not do, though, to leave them there without quoting their seventeenth-century Bill Ackerman, who recorded this:

"... We found in diverse places that abundance of fish lying so thick with their heads above the water, as for want of nets (our Barge striving amongst them) we attempted to catch them with a frying pan, but wee found it a bad instrument to catch fish with. Neither better fish, more plenty, or variety, had any of us ever seene, in any place swimming in the water, than in the Bay of Chisapeack, but there not to be caught with Frying-pans."

That, though, was 300 years ago.

The Work Projects Administration now has taken up the fight against that curse of the upper Potomac, the water chestnut. This agency, it advises the taxpayers, has enrolled the lists as part of its task of combatting malaria, though it notes that "spread of the water chestnut has been rapid in the last few years and its spread has brought protests from sportsmen, wild life conservationists and boatmen."

Tee to Green

By Merrell Whittlesey

The average golfer can be excused for forgetting who won the National Open championship, a week old today, but there is no excuse whatsoever for him forgetting who lost it.

If they paid off in publicity, William Lawson Little, jr., otherwise known as the new champion, would today be a much poorer man than Edward Oliver, who left Cleveland without 5 cents of Open prize money.

WHITTLESEY

However I would much rather attempt to buy a steak with a portion of Little's $1,000 cash than I would with one of the hundreds of columns that have been written about Porky Ed because he blew the title by his ignorance of the rule book.

Oliver, to date, has probably received more publicity for not winning the Open than any champion has for winning it, within such a short time. The incident that caused the Hornell, N. Y., pro's disqualification has far eclipsed Sammy Snead's 8 on the last hole at Spring Mill a year ago, measured in nation-wide publicity.

So many different stories have been written about Oliver that they have overlapped on the sports pages. On page 1, someone may be defending the U. S. G. A. On page 2, the parent golf body may be called a band of offensive businessmen, that ruined a promising young golfer's career. Another column or two may be stuck around on an eyewitness account of the proceedings, or a statement by Oliver or the U. S. G. A. He's been defended, panned, excommunicated, discouraged and has received a thousand bits of advice tantamount to locking the stable when the horse is gone.

Without shilling, the natural reaction is that the lucky (professional was robbed as the rules were interpreted too close. Winning that championship would have changed his entire life. Although he won the Pasadena and Phoenix Opens on the winter tour, the golfing public has a habit of quickly forgetting the minor winter Open champions. He was a virtual unknown in Cleveland, and now he is known only as another pro who lost the national Open, not because he blew up but because he didn't use his head.

If Eddie Oliver thought Maury Fitzgerald and I were kidding when we told him of Al Houghton and Eddie Steven's disqualification in the local open qualifying rounds for beating the starter's gun, well Eddie has a questionable sense of humor. Dutch Harrison and Johnny Bulla have probably played in hundreds of pro tournaments between them, but they insisted Eddie drive as "nobody can disqualify us for starting early," according to Bulla. They inferred we didn't know what we were talking about.

Eddie just stood there. He didn't want to break a rule but he was prancing like a thoroughbred and wanted to get off that tee, to beat the crowds that were bound to come when they knew he could win, and the rain that was even more threatening.

Oliver played here a dozen or more times in the past two years and we got to know him fairly well. And just when he was about to listen to what proved to be the winning argument, Bulla yelled "none on" again and Oliver banged the drive off the tee, 25 minutes before his scheduled time and without authority to leave the tee. Penalty—disqualification—as you all know now.

It is amazing how Bulla, Oliver, Harrison and the veteran Ky Laffoon, who grounded them, could overlook a rule that is so plainly stated in the rule books. Quote "Competitors shall start in the order and at the times arranged by the committee." Penalty—Disqualification.

Oliver and his partners in crime picked on Hagen, who was allowed to start after arriving a little tardy on the tee. But the Haig was in his rights, as ten minutes leeway is allowed by the rule book for late arrivals. Others cited the case of the Argentine, Enrique Bertolino, who failed to make the sectional qualifying grade but was allowed to play under a special ruling. "Why make special rules for others, and keep this kid out of the championship." That was just a case of international good will. The players made the trip, under the impression they were automatic qualifiers. They were entitled to a special ruling.

Still other stanch Oliver supporters chided the U. S. G. A. for not having an official in the tent on the first tee at all times. But there was an hour intermission between the last threesome in the morning and the first in the afternoon, so why couldn't the starter go to lunch.

The U. S. G. A. knew it would be on the spot if it disqualified the likable young professional, and it is. But here is one firm vote for the association. If fellows like Al Houghton, who has played in 15 Opens, Oliver, Harrison, Bulla, Laffoon and others don't know the simple rules, they are shamming as pros.

Mothers planning to send children to camp this summer will find the eight-page index prepared by the Council of Social Agencies useful. Private and public camps located in Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia are listed along with their locations, sponsors and addresses, capacities and feed. Camps in other States, whose directors are located in Washington, are also listed. Copies may be had free by writing Mr. Hugo Wolter, Council of Social Agencies, 1101 M street.

DAVIS

Three District women are at Camp Letts attending sessions at Red Cross Aquatic School for this area, which began last Wednesday and continues for two weeks. They are Mrs. Clarence N. Goodman, member of the local Red Cross volunteer motor corps; Ethel Hoffman, major student in physical education at George Washington University; and Lillian Agnes Smith, who received the annual scholarship awarded each year for outstanding service to the District Red Cross chapter.

Kathryn Terhune will propose two changes in official volley ball rules when she lends suggestions to National Committee Chairman Norma Leavitt (University of Missouri) sometime before July 1. Advocating nine instead of eight on a team, she proposes a new system of rotation. Now each girl plays all positions. The change would make each player play three positions—for example, left front, left center and left back. As chairman of the District, Miss Terhune suggests changes based on reactions of District teachers to a questionnaire circulated this spring.

The "Official Basketball Guide for Women," containing 1940-1941 rules as revised and clarified by the Section's basketball committee, is due out the first of next month.

"The teacher takes a three-month holiday every year" may be true in theory, but try and find someone who does it. Jenny Turnbull, of George Washington University, is the only physical education teacher we've found who has announced plans to do just that this summer. She will be with her parents at Fort Sam Houston, Tex.

Mrs. Louise Stein Kjellstrom, national motion picture committee chairman, leaves next week to teach badminton, fencing and tennis at Ohio State University's five-week sports clinic. Gretchen Felker, of Hollins Arms School, will be running her girls' camp, "4,500 feet up," at Mountain Lake, Va. She will take her sister Barbara, instructor at Mead College, and her assistant at Hollins, Deborah Klemmer, with her as counselors. Kaye Terhune, teacher at Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School, has abandoned her N. A. A. duties in Wisconsin to be at home until fall. She will be a student all summer.

Ackerman On Fishing

Tommy Aitken, author of fishing and outdoor stories for many years, has been responsible for much of the success of the big Miami fishing tournaments. We know it is with real satisfaction that he announces the start of a summer tournament to run through August 4. With trophies, prizes, plaques and citations, and in every other way patterned after the winter tournament, which this year had 162,000 anglers participating.

ACKERMAN

And why not? Doesn't southern Florida have weather that is consistently far more pleasant than we have in the North, no humidity, and fishing that is just about 500 per cent better than the winter fishing. We have always thought July and August in Miami or the Keys below was just about tops in the way of a fishing vacation. There is no doubt about anyone going back that once tries it.

When the season on black bass opened in New Jersey on June 15 licensed anglers were able to fish for any kind of game fish. The trout season does not close until July 15, and they are still stocking the streams with real fish, for what aren't caught now will be available for the September season.

The bass fishing in Jersey is expected this year to be more productive than even the banner season of last year, when more and larger bass were taken than at any time since they were first stocked in streams of the State.

The bass season does not close until November 30, the same time that it closes on pike, pickerel and wall-eyes.

The meeting of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Chapter of the Izaak Walton League on Wednesday evening at the National Capital Field Trials Clubhouse out on Bradley boulevard is extremely important to all members, for by-laws must be adopted for the incorporation under the laws of the State of Maryland.

Fishing around Solomons this year is better by far than it has been for several past. Capt. Dick Lore and Capt. Harry Woodburn, both reporting hardheads running up to 3½ pounds in weight and in great numbers. Good news, for there is no finer fishing port in bay waters.

Capt. Taft Tippett at Ridge has given up reporting his catches by numbers. Instead he says you can catch them two at a time and for as long as you care to fish. On his last trip out he also had far more large tautogs, weighing up to 5 pounds, and six trout.

Dan McCarthy, the genial secretary of the Red and Red Club, is warning members against "Fifth Columns" activities in their midst. Anglers here might also heed his warning that:

Headed by ubiquitous Gen. Carelessness, this subversive group is on the job 24 hours a day. It has a most efficient sabotage department in charge of Agents Rust, Rot and Corrosion. When this bunch of merry marauders get through doing a job on your equipment, you can kiss goodby to your chances of landing big fish."

Dog Queries

Q. I have a dog that just won't stay at home and I have been advised to have him altered. If so, how will this affect him and do you advise it? I will be guided by your advice.

A. My gosh, here's somebody asking for advice and they're going to heed it. Usually everybody wants to tell you how it will affect the dog from his point of view, but we would much rather do without a dog than even a mutilated one.

Q. To settle an argument will you publish in your column about how many worms your canary eats and swims per week?

A. Eh, huh, another personal note, but we don't mind. Just to ease any of you think this job's a pike we realize and try to answer from 250 to 300 queries per week.

Q. How often should a dog be wormed. I have been advised to worm my dog every month for the first year.

A. A dog should never be wormed unless there are definite indications that he has an overabundance of them. Your vet can tell definitely by an examination of the feces. Sometimes worming has killed more dogs than the worms.

Know Your Dogs—

No. 95 of a Series

By George Berner

WIREHAIRED DACHSHUND

Another branch of the Dachshund family, classed as the same breed as smooth and long-haired Dachshunds but why we will never know. This fellow is entirely modern and is probably the result of a cross of smooth Dachshund and Dandie Dinmont Terrier.

Timely Suggestions for Your Dog During the Hot Summer Months

Wonder if the time will ever come when it won't be necessary for us to use up a column on Dog Days every summer? Though we have explained this particular doggy fable many times, every year about this time, queries on the subject literally pour in.

BERNER

Many have said that they wanted to buy a dog for their children but thought it better to wait until after dog days and so they want to know just when the so-called period starts and ends. For the love of Mike don't let dog days affect your purchase of a dog. They have absolutely nothing to do with dogs but, rather, are closely allied with astronomy.

Don't ever listen to the nitwit who tells about dogs going mad during dog days or that dogs revert to the wild during this period or any other story, for that matter, concerning dogs and dog days.

The period known as dog days has been known as such since the days of ancient Egypt. It seems that every year a particularly bright star appeared in the eastern sky and about the time it showed up the Nile river overflowed, assuring bountiful harvests for the coming year. The Egyptians watched eagerly for this star each summer and because of its faithfulness in appearing each year at exactly the same time, they named it Cirius after the dog. Since then that period of from 20 days before the stars appears and 20 days after has been known as dog days, usually from about July 3 to August 11.

We have often heard that dogs go mad in the summer time. They do but only if they are bitten by a rabid animal, as that is the only way they can get the disease, as the weather or the season of the year has nothing to do with that particular story. Then there are those that tell us that dogs bite more often during the hot weather, etc. Now there might be some truth in this, in fact there probably is. A dog shouldn't bite at any season of the year but we can understand why even an even tempered animal will fly off the handle and take a nip at some people.

Just for instance, what would you do if you were lying in a very hot but otherwise comfortable hammock and suffering with the heat as most of us do at times. You know, all hot and sweaty and sticky, and then some ape came along and ran his hot hands through your hair or grabbed your nose, shaking it playfully as we do a dog's. He might even wallop you on the side of the head or take a playful if jolting poke at your ribs or do any of the many things we do to our pets.

There isn't a doubt in the world what would happen. You would tell him to stop a few times and then if he persisted, probably start a backhand from the ground up and aimed in the general direction of his equator while telling the fool exactly what you thought of him and most of his ancestors.

Well, let's look at the dog in the same position. It's hot, and the poor brute is lying with his belly on the ground, panting and slobbering and just trying to get by until dark and things get cool. Some overenthusiastic soul comes along and tweaks his nose, shakes his head, pats him on the side nearly knocking his wind out, etc. The dog can't say "For the love of Mike beat it and let me alone" He hasn't any hands to push the offender away, and he probably hasn't the necessary energy to get up and go away himself. Ninety-nine out of a hundred dogs will stay there and take it patiently waiting for the tormentor to get through and right there is one time the dog is superior to man, certainly to this man anyway. But suppose the poor mutt just can't stand it any longer and finally remonstrates in the only manner in his power and bites? Shall he be whipped severely or perhaps shot as an outlaw. Most assuredly not, he should be reprimanded of course and made to understand that biting isn't proper under any circumstances but if he was ours we'd probably pat him on the head, haul him out as though we meant it but really feeling that the person bitten richly deserved it.

Children, too, should be cautioned about teasing a dog during the hot weather. Our tempers are very apt to be shorter when we are literally steaming and the dog, even the very good natured dog might fly off the handle and do something he is immediately sorry for.

Well, it seems we strayed from the dog days angle but that's a habit of ours and the fables and stories of dog days are so silly they don't deserve much space anyway. Just remember that during the summer your dog is just as hot as you are, don't allow him to be teased or over exercised, do everything you can to help him keep cool and forget about dog days. There ain't no such thing as far as dogs are concerned.

Post & Rail

By Anne Hagner

Horse show committees that bend backward in an effort to develop "atmosphere" in their respective exhibitions would do well to observe the carryings-on each June in Upperville, the one spot on the circuit where surroundings and activities never seem to clash.

Anne Hagner

Prying into the cause of Upperville's tremendous success is no easy job, although most people think tradition has much to do with it. Ever since old Col. Dulany chose Grafton Farm's shady grove to prove that his yearlings were better than a neighbor's, back in 1853, the show has possessed that intangible something that is hard to define but easy to enjoy—called, for want of a better word, atmosphere.

Whatever that unknown quantity is, it was sufficient to lure thousands of spectators away from such attractions as the closing days of Charles Town Friday and yesterday. All of them were not dyed-in-the-wool horse lovers, either, for hundreds from the ranks of the non-horsey succumbed to Upperville's spell and lolled in the shade of the famed Grafton oaks.

No show in captivity could get away with having class after class devoted to conformation judging, yet ardent fans and the not-so-ardent crowded the rails to watch the cream of America's young hunters. Many of the same yearlings and 2-year-olds appear in other shows throughout the year, but their presence is noted only by veteran horse show fans, not by casual spectator.

Because of the tradition that lies in back of an Upperville ribbon, it is the most coveted bit of silk in the Old Dominion. Those who become thoroughly immersed in the spirit of the place have even gone so far as to state that they'd rather win a fourth at Upperville than a blue at Madison Square Garden, though none of that fervor may be due to an extra-tall mint julep at luncheon.

Sprawling on the deep grass in the center of the outside course, or milling in the ring during the actual judging of yearlings and 2-year-olds, or even clambering about the grandstand to chat with friends—the effect is always the same. Whether you argue solidly with your neighbor about the relative merits of two 15-hand colts, or mill around in the crowd in front of the grandstand to see folks you haven't seen since last year's Upperville show, you emerge with a feeling for the place that can't be matched from Front Royal to Bassett.

Rail chips: Don't forget the Warrenton Pony Show, which comes off next Saturday .... All the small fry in Virginia is ready to go .... For the record, Mrs. George Watts Hill's Balkonian and Inky took champion and reserve titles, respectively, at Norfolk last week-end .... Dicky Kelley gave Balkonian, who is no easy horse to ride, some topnotch rounds .... Inky, performing in her usual clockwork manner, retired the big Corinthian Challenge Bowl .... Betty Cousens' Jag, one of the nicest 3-year-olds in Virginia, became eligible at Norfolk for the 3-year-old championship class at Warrenton in September .... Notes on District Tennis:

Bobby Bensinger Is Washington's Standout

By Jack Munhall

Bobby Bensinger, the 16-year-old Takoma Academy student, is the city's most talked about tennis player these days .... Holder of the National boys' indoor title, Bensinger will seek the junior outdoor championship at the Bladen Cricket Club starting July 1 .... Among the older veterans here Bensinger is held in high esteem but there are few who believe the diminutive youngster ever will achieve high National senior ranking .... They don't believe his game is sound enough to enable him to offset his physical shortcomings .... Should Bensinger sprout into a full-sized young man, these observers say they may alter their predictions .... At any rate, Bobby already is being heralded as the player who ultimately will succeed Barney Welsh as District champion.

With accountancy of Georgetown's star, Davis Johnson's access to the going into college .... Once rated one of the greatest young prospects ever developed in the District Johnson is not showing the expected improvement as he approaches manhood .... Recording all the strokes needed to make a champion and with 51 form that is best described as "pictures be-fish," Johnson's only shortcoming appears to be his temperament .... It seems Davis only plays hard when he is determined to win .... and at times he seems indifferent about winning.

BOBBY BENSINGER

The expected has happened in the case of Hugh Lynch, the gentleman who inspired in local circles the slogan "always a finalist but never a champion. .... His backhand this season is definitely improved, due beyond any doubt to the fact that his opponents have been pounding at it for the last three years or ever since someone made the discovery that that was the way to beat the former Princetonian star. .... According to Lynch, Barney Welsh is the only player here who doesn't concentrate on shooting to Lynch's backhand. .... Barney's strategy is a bit different. .... He plays to Hugh's forehand until Lynch is drawn to the right side of the court and then Welsh smashes to his backhand with telling results. .... Despite the fact that the mighty figure of Barney Welsh has for many years stood between Lynch and much higher ranking in District tennis circles, Hugh has nothing but the highest admiration for the Rockville Ranger. .... Watching Barney create swirling drafts with vicious placements against Alphonse Smith in a recent City of Washington tournament match at Edgemoor Club, Lynch was moved to say "I doubt if there is a player in the country who can beat Welsh on those courts when he's right."

Tristenagh Captures Rouss Memorial at Charles Town

English-Bred Gelding Pays $15.20 Price

Favorite Dulie Runs Second; Victory Proves Surprise; 7,000 Fans Present

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Charles Town, W. Va., June 15.—Tristenagh, an English-bred gelding and one of a consignment purchased in Europe by an American syndicate seeking steeplechase material, gave the favorite players a jolting blow today when he romped off with the Senator M. O. Rouss Memorial Handicap. The day's feature named for the West Virginia official who introduced the racing bill under which the track here operates found the favored Dulie, in the colors of C. M. Feltner, second in the field of eight. Mrs. M. Reis' Sunny Rose was third at the end of the test over the mile and a sixteenth course.

Tristenagh, a hefty son of Astab, carried the silks of R. E. McConnell while under the guidance of Jockey Tony Vesseli, leading rider at the meeting. The crowd of 7,000 gave the mysterious newcomer some consideration, but the majority turned away when his only race in this country showed him beaten far off in maiden company.

After all was said after the race was run, Tristenagh was a two-length winner at a $15.20 mutuel. His time of 1:47 was only fair for the route despite the fact that the track was never in better condition.

Vesseli took Tristenagh to the front on the swing to the stretch, the first time around. Jockey Hernandez hustled up on the outside of the leader. Giggle Lee and Sea Boy were close but not in the same class with the front two.

From that point to midway of the stretch, Tristenagh and Dulie put on a battle beautiful to see. Both boys gave all they had, but, with 16 pounds the worst of the weights, Tristenagh had the most left for the important final furlong and gradually drew away from his rival. Sunny Rose closed gamely but too late to get the important money.

Sammy Palumbo and a fleet-footed Red Wings proved the right combination in the first race, the little Happy Time filly winning by four lengths over Chief Cherokee, with Habit third. Red Wings paid $13.40 after Adhelmar had proven an unworthy favorite.

The day's daily double brought a $38.40 pay off with Nanci's Best taking the second race and the first half of the twin wager. Jockey Buddy Root brought this filly along with a rush in the late stages and hung a nose defeat on Congo Prince with Palumbo up.

The 11-year-old Frederick proved the best of eight gathered for the third race. The veteran, booted by Jockey Freddie Faust, pulled away from Stealing Home and Kai-Min in the stretch run. Frederick was a $7.80 second choice.

War Won't Hurt Ice Hockey Here, Says Mackenzie

Despite the pressure of warfare involving Great Britain and France, Washingtonians will not be deprived of their ice hockey next winter.

So says Coach Redvers Mackenzie, of the Washington Eagles, who currently is serving his eleventh consecutive year as golf professional of the exclusive Elm Ridge Golf and Country Club, near Montreal.

"We are naturally distressed over the war up here and are doing everything we can to help Great Britain and France," Mackenzie wrote friends here, "but we also are looking ahead to ice hockey and other body building sports.

"At the worst we will be forced to restrict our hockey players to the ranks of married men, and many of our best players are married. In the event there is no conscription by November we will return at full strength."

Len Burrage, Washington great defenseman, is to report here shortly where he will accept employment. Burrage's great play was outstanding in the successful second place drive of the Washington Eagles last season.

300 Craft to Race In Legion Regatta At Colonial Beach

More than 300 sailboats and power craft are expected at the American Legion carnival and regatta at Colonial Beach June 29 and 30, the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce has been informed. Washington and Baltimore clubs have indicated about 80 boats of members will cruise there for the two-day event.

The program begins the morning of June 29 with workboat races, runabout races, knockabout and round bottom sailing races, and events for moths, chine bottoms, Hampton one design, Snipe, Albatross, cruiser and open class. Class A, B, C and F outboard races will be held June 30 over a 5-mile course. Norman Brewington, member of the Colonial Beach town council, heads the regatta committee.

Bernie Scherer to Coach At Morningside College

Sioux City, Iowa, June 15 (AP).—Bernie Scherer, former University of Nebraska end, today was named assistant varsity football coach and head freshman basketball coach at Morningside College here.

Scherer, who has been playing professional football with the Green Bay Packers, also will teach courses in the physical education department, President Carl Roadman announced.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NANCI'S BEST, $9.80, $4.20, $3.20; CONGO PRINCE, $3.20, $2.60; SCHLEY AL, $4.20.
NANCI'S BEST lacked early speed and was in close quarters entering backstretch, came with bold rush when clear and was up in final strides. CONGO PRINCE came around CHILLEEVALEE to get to top and barely failed to last while under pressure. CHILLEEVALEE was tiptoed to front going into first turn, saved ground while setting pace and tired in stretch. SUPREME KIN was held safe. MISS KANTAR could not reach contention. LADY DOCTOR and PAPER GIRL stopped badly.

THIRD RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:38½ Off 3:37½. Winner, blk. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—FREDRICK, $7.80, $3.80, $2.60; STEALING HOME, $4.80, $3.20; KAI-MIN, $3.00.
FREDRICK was rated while within striking distance, came around leaders entering stretch and disposed of STEALING HOME to be opening a gap at end. STEALING HOME took command at once, saved ground, but could not resist winner. KAI-MIN was allowed to drop back in early stages, came through on rail entering stretch and was eased up when beaten. JUMELUS was closest to pace to midstretch and weakened suddenly. BRED IN BLUE pulled up sore. LADY TIMEROLE was hard ridden to hold forward position and tired. ANA X could not reach serious contention.

Daily Double, NANCI'S BEST and FREDRICK, Paid $38.40

FOURTH RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:06½ Off 4:06. Winner, William O. Wright's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—FRANK H, $7.80, $3.80, $2.60; SUPER JOHN, $3.60, $2.60; GOLD SWEEP, $2.80.
FRANK H forged to front leaving backstretch and withstood long drive to last ahead of SUPER JOHN'S closing bid. SUPER JOHN came to outside for racing room and closed with bold rush. GOLD SWEEP was hard ridden throughout, held forward position to stretch and stopped. PEETOMAR closed gamely. BETWICK was unable to threaten seriously. CHIDE set early pace and was tiring at end. PUMICE STONE and DOUBLE ON SEA made up some ground.

FIFTH RACE—About 7 furlongs. Purse, $500; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:40. Off 4:40. Winner, G. A. Saportas, jr.'s ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—GOLD D'OR, $4.20, $3.00, $2.60; GOLDEN KEY, $8.20, $3.40; ANYA, $3.80.
GOLD D'OR, not hurried in early stages, came to outside for racing room, moved up full of run under drive and wore down GOLDEN KEY in concluding strides. GOLDEN KEY was sent to front at once, shook off BELLTHORN to draw clear and fought it out with good energy and barely failed to last. ANYA could not keep up early and came with good courage in closing test. MIGHTY BUSY was forwardly placed from start and weakened in final furlong. BELLTHORN was closest to pace for 3 furlings and quit.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $600; handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:09½. Off 5:10. Winner, R. E. McConnell's br. g. (4), by Astab—Charleston Lady. Trained by Q. Jackson. Value to winner, $450; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:47.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TRISTENAGH, $15.20, $6.60, $4.40; DULIE, $3.40, $2.60; SUNNY ROSE, $4.80.
TRISTENAGH forged to front early, saved ground, withstood bids of DULIE and drew out in final quarter. DULIE was under hard riding from start and weakened when placed to punishment. SUNNY ROSE responded when placed to pressure and closed willingly. GIGGLE LEE was keen forward factor early and weakened. WORTHOWNING showed a good effort. CHARMING HEROD was in trouble on backstretch and was held safe thereafter. AUPOIN showed nothing. SEABOY had early speed while losing ground and tired badly.

SEVENTH RACE—About 4½ furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:43. Off 5:43. Winner, Blue Grass Farm's b. m. (6), by Sir Andrew—Painted Vixen. Trained by W. L. Brock. Value to winner, $300; second, $60; third, $30; fourth, $10. Time, 0:50.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CELTIC LEGEND, $9.40, $4.40, $3.60; PROSIT, $2.90, $2.40; MISS MAKER, $7.80.
CELTIC LEGEND, in thick of contention from start, responded to strong handling in stretch and wore down PROSIT. The latter saved ground while under strong handling and fought it out with good courage. MISS MAKER raced close up from start and closed gamely. STUBBS had keen early speed from start, drew out approaching stretch, but ran to outside fence and was taken up. BILL BLEISS went evenly and was held as a factor. REGAL SUN stumbled leaving gate and failed to rally. TRAPSHOT was held safe.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 6:18½. Off 6:16. Winner, M. J. Daly's ch. g. (8), by Catalan—Croix Rouge. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $300; second, $60; third, $30; fourth, $10. Time, 1:49⅘.

Mrs. Walper to Head Record Field for D. C. Golf Title Play

148 Entered In Tourney At Kenwood

Qualifying Round Set for Tomorrow, Match Play Tuesday; Finals Carded Friday

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

An all-time record field of 148, including Defending Champion Mrs. Lee Walper, will play in the Women's District Golf Championship Monday at Kenwood Country Club, according to the pairings released yesterday by Mrs. Frank H. Cramer, tournament chairman.

The record field will qualify tomorrow over the 18-hole route, with match play following, one match a day through Friday's finals. Flights will be provided for every player that returns a card, and at least seven brackets of 16 are expected to swing into the first round of match play Tuesday morning.

Mrs. Walper, who won the title last year in a thrilling 19-hole match with Marion Brown, will qualify with Mrs. George Goetzmann and Mrs. M. J. Terlinski. Miss Brown is not among the entrants.

Stokes Blocks Path

Blocking the path to a second consecutive crown for the Capital Club champion is the Middle Atlantic titleholder, Mrs. Walter R. Stokes, who topped the District entries in the Eastern Women's last week in Baltimore. Mrs. Myren Dery, Congressional, has been working hard on her game and is a distinct threat while the host club will be ably represented by a former champion, Mrs. Betty Mackley and Mrs. Richard Kreuzburg.

The city champion Chevy Chase team will send, among others, Mrs. Bishop Hill, Mrs. L. B. Platt and Elizabeth Houghton in the title chase while in addition to Mrs. Stokes Manor will have Mrs. L. G. Pray after the crown.

Diffenbaugh Referee

George Diffenbaugh, Kenwood professional, will referee the final round on Friday.

The women golfers will no sooner finish the biggest city championship in history before they will have to get their entries in for two tournaments the following week.

The Maryland State Women's championship, with Mrs. Jessane Sloman, of Baltimore, defending, will be played June 25-29 at Hillendale, with entries closing at noon Friday, June 21. Entries, accompanied by checks, must be mailed before that time to Mrs. C. H. Hoffrogge, 216 Old Orchard road, Baltimore. Starting times for the Washington players will be reserved between 10 and 11 a. m.

Locally, the C. B. S. Cup for the 19 to 36 handicap golfers will be played Monday, June 24, at Washington Golf and Country Club, with entries closing Friday, June 21, with Mrs. J. B. Walsh at Chestnut 6718.

Gladiators Register Calm Before Storm That Comes Tomorrow

Wild Bill McDowell takes time out from his workout to get chummy with Pete, one of Joe Turner's favorite hunting dogs which lives back of his W street arena where the Texan is staging public workouts for tomorrow night's battle in Griffith Stadium

And here's the 6-foot-1 lad Wild Bill will fight—the Cocoa Kid, No. 1 welterweight contender, getting a bit of perspiration rubbed off his damp brow by his trainer, Georgie Sachs. Both boys will hold workouts for the public today at 1 and 2 p. m.

Triple A Net Title Captured By Wolfenden

Top-Seeded Player Beats Mary Hardwick After Losing First Set

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, June 15.—After losing the first set, top-seeded Virginia Wolfenden, of San Francisco, easily won the women's singles championship of the Triple A tennis tournament today, defeating Mary Hardwick, of London, 2—6, 6—0, 6—1.

The English girl regained some prestige, however, in coming back with her London teammate, Nina Brown, to cop the women's doubles title from Miss Wolfenden and Pat Canning, of Alameda, Calif., 6—3, 7—5.

Frankie Parker, of Pasadena, Calif., defending men's singles champion, entered the finals with a 6—1, 6—0, 2—6, 4—6, 7—5 semi-final victory over Ted Schroeder, of Glendale, Calif. Parker will meet Frank Kovacs, of Oakland, Calif., who defeated Edward Alloo, of Berkeley, Calif., 8—6, 8—1, 4—6, 6—1, in the other semi-final match.

Kovacs and Ed Amark, San Francisco, defeated George Toley, Los Angeles, and Schroeder, 6—3, 8—2, in one semi-final match in the men's doubles. In the other, Bob Peacock, Laguna Beach, Calif., and Bob Harmon, Berkeley, defeated Arthur Marx, Beverly Hills, Calif., and Charles Mattmann, New York, in the first set, 16—14, when the match was caled because of darkness. It will be continued tomorrow morning.

Colored Elks Plan 8 Bouts

A 30-round boxing card which will feature Henry Armstrong, world's welterweight champion, in the role of referee for the main bout was announced yesterday by the Purple Glove committee of the Colored Elks.

The card brings together 16 amateurs Wednesday night at 1918 Fourteenth street northwest.

The card includes Bucks Weeks vs. Thunder Bolt Queen; Robert Hanes vs. Benjamin Hammond; Ben Johnson vs. Dundee Freeman; James Roberson vs. Berkley Brown; Sam Bradley vs. Sheppe Proctor; George Ferrell vs. Virgil Harris; Chapple Manning vs. Jimmie Whitney; Randolph Striplin vs. Alton Williams.

Picard, Revolta Are Twice Beaten

Smith and Jimmy Thomson, minus 6; Ed Dudley and Billy Burke, minus 6, and Walter Hagen and Byron Nelson minus 13.

With two rounds to go, Demaret and Metz led the sub-par scorers with a best ball of 272, or 32 under even figures. Dudley and Burke were 15 under par, and the entire field was 190 strokes below regular figures for the 72 holes.

Under the Inverness scoring plan a team gets a "plus" for each hole it finishes ahead of an opponent, while the losing team gets a minus equal to the number it finishes "down."

Thursday Round

Hagen-Nelson, 32, 34—66, two up on Picard-Revolta, 32, 34—67; Snead-Guldahl, 32, 33—65, two up on Demaret-Metz, 33, 34—67; Hagen-Nelson, 33, 34—67, even with Smith-Thomson, 33, 33—67; Sarazen-Heafner, 32, 34—66, one up on Dudley-Burke, 33, 33—67.

Afternoon Round

Snead-Guldahl, 33, 33—66, three up on Picard-Revolta, 34, 34—68; Demaret-Metz, 31, 31—62, four up on Hagen-Nelson, 34, 33—67; Smith-Thomson, 34, 33—67, even up on Dudley-Burke, 32, 37—69; Sarazen-Heafner, 33, 34—67, one up on Little-Middlecoff, 33, 34—67.

Today's Pairings

Morning round—Hagen-Nelson vs. Sarazen-Heafner; Demaret-Metz vs. Picard-Revolta; Snead-Guldahl vs. Smith-Thomson; Dudley-Burke vs. Middlecoff-Little.

Afternoon round—Smith-Thomson vs. Picard-Revolta, Sarazen-Heafner vs. Demaret-Metz, Hagen-Nelson vs. Middlecoff-Little, Snead-Guldahl vs. Dudley-Burke.

Cocoa Kid Choice Over McDowell Tomorrow

Rules 7-to-5 Choice in Capital's First Mixed Bout; 7,000 Fans Expected at Griffith Stadium; Victor Gets Title Shot

By Al Hailey

The opening shot in a drive to put boxing back in the black on the ledger books will be fired tomorrow night at Griffith Stadium when Louis "Kid" Cocoa and "Wild" Bill McDowell take over the ring for a ten-round battle.

It will be the start of a new era in the District's fight history. Not only is it the Capital's first mixed match, but is one which will lift Washington out of the "club fight" class, at least for a night.

The Cocoa Kid is a highly regarded fighting machine of proven ability, while the curly haired lad from Texas has stolen Capital fans' esteem with his two victories over Phil Furr.

It should be a real battle out at the ball park, and the tld ballyhoo of public workouts is just so much wasted motion.

Both Workout Today

The colored Puerto Rican and McDowell met yesterday for the first time in public training sessions at Turner's arena and will hold another session today—Cocoa at 1 and McDowell at 2 p. m.

Promoter Joe Turner's other publicity "angle" was that tomorrow night's fight will select an August opponent for Champion Henry Armstrong, if Henry hasn't lost the crown to Lew Jenkins by the date.

Rated the No. 1 welterweight contender, Cocoa will be a 7-to-5 favorite over the curly-haired Texas youth.

The colored lad hasn't lost a fight in two years and will be after his forty-second straight victory tomorrow night.

Cocoa came to town yesterday, with his inevitable portable radio, with added prestige—a one-round technical knockout over Johnny Barbara Thursday night in Philadelphia.

Kid Has Chopping Right

The hard-hitting colored fighter claimed he mowed down Barbara with his chopping right hand, which bodes no good for McDowell.

Wild Bill was floored by Phil Furr's right hand in the fifth round of their first fight, and although he got back up to win the fight he may be running into stiffer punching from Cocoa. The colored boy hits hard with both hands, and what's more he hits often.

McDowell's chief hope is his educated left hand—the weapon which enabled him to upset 3-to-1 odds against him and defeat Furr in their first fight and then come back to beat Phil a second time.

Ticket Moguls George King and Nap Procter yesterday reported a highly pleasing demand for duents and predicted a crowd of close to 7,500. Advance sale has surpassed that for the recent Furr-Mannikas fight which netted $3,200.

The supporting card tomorrow has Billy Banks, local colored feather, meeting Baltimore's Joe Sole, Early Ward fighting Frank Rosano in six-rounders. Two four-rounders bring out Jack Flowers against Floyd Grayson and Ray Landis against Dunkirk Nixon, Fort Myer soldier.

Overton Wins Mid-Atlantic Golf Crown

Beats Otto Greiner In Final Round, 1 Up; Takes Lead on 17th

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, June 15.—Spencer S. Overton, of the Rolling Road Club, Baltimore, defeated Otto Greiner, of Baltimore, 1-up in the 18-hole finals of the Middle Atlantic Golf Association Tournament at Hillendale Club today.

All even on the sixteenth, Overton pitched his ball to within 6 feet on the 110-yard seventeenth. When Greiner barely missed a 10-foot putt, Overton holed out and took the lead for the first time in the match and held his advantage on the final hole.

Greiner, of the Terra Mariae Club, defeated Robert E. Jones, of Baltimore, in the semifinals, 6 and 5. Overton gained the finals by eliminating Dr. Edward Stinebert, 2 and 1.

Printer Golf Event Changed To Beaver Dam

Entire Tournament to Be Played at Club Instead of Splitting

Officers of the Union Printers International Golf Association shifted the courses for the annual tournament to be played here the first week in August, transferring the entire four-day event to Beaver Dam, instead of splitting it between Manor and Congressional.

According to C. E. Purdy, local committeeman, the golfers objected to playing the tournament over two courses, preferring to play the four 18-hole medal rounds over the same layout. Neither Manor or Congressional was available for the entire week.

The shift to Beaver Dam increases the chances of the championship coming to this city as Joe Balestri, of the G. P. O., is the host club champion. Balestri won the Allied Trades title last year and that class has been moved into the championship proper.

The officers expect more than 200 entries, the biggest field in history, for the tournament here. Registration on August 3 will be followed by a practice round the next day and the tournament proper starting Monday, August 5, and continuing through the 8th. The women's championship, won by Mrs. C. E. Purdy, of Beaver Dam, last year, will also be played over the Landover course.

Womens Trans-Miss. Awarded Houston Club

St. Louis, June 15 (AP).—River Oaks Country Club, Houston, Tex., was chosen today as the site of the 1941 women's Trans-Mississippi Golf tournament. Bids were received from Denver, Chicago and Des Moines for the 1942 event.

Mrs. Gil Hahn Wins Handicap At Woodmont

Mrs. Stephens Loses, 1-Down, in Finals Of Club Championship

Mrs. Gilbert Hahn is the new Woodmont women's handicap champion, as she defeated Mrs. Arthur Stephens, 1 up, in the final round yesterday. Mrs. Hahn spotted her opponent seven strokes.

The consolation finals will be replayed next week as Ruth Simon and Mrs. Herbert Sauber finished all even.

ARMY AND NAVY

Protecting a dormie 1 up advantage by taking the last hole, Mrs. M. K. Barroll won the spring match play championship at Army and Navy by defeating Mrs. A. Lynch, 2 up.

Mrs. L. Haugen won the second flight over Mrs. O. Eible, 2 and 1, and Mrs. H. Shaffer was the third-flight victor over Mrs. E. R. Henning, 2 and 1.

The scheduled match between the Service Club men's team and the Country Club of Virginia linksmen was indefinitely postponed.

CONGRESSIONAL

J. E. Freeman and G. W. Neville advanced to the finals of the President's Cup tournament yesterday at Congressional, and will meet for the title today. Freeman defeated Dr. Noah Pomeroy, 4 and 3, while Neville won 6 and 5 over H. E. Randel.

Wiffy Cox played the back nine at Congressional in 31 strokes yesterday with only one par. Twice he was over regulation figures but he made up for it with six birdies, all from short putts.

He was two over par on the out nine with a 36, with one birdie, netting seven birdies for the round and a two-under par 70. He was playing with W. P. Folger and H. L. Post.

First Flight

J. E. Freeman defeated Dr. Noah Pomeroy, 4 and 3; G. W. Neville defeated H. E. Randel, 6 and 5.

Second Flight

F. J. Winkler defeated G. W. Ruth, 3 and 1; Dr. O. T. Bauer defeated H. D. Wesner, 5 and 3.

Third Flight

W. D. Cannell defeated T. W. Bear, 3 and 2; A. J. Abbott won by default.

Fourth Flight Finals

A. J. Berman defeated A. J. Cristabero.

STATE ENTERS CLOSE

Wednesday noon is the entry deadline for the Maryland State amateur golf championship, scheduled Friday, Saturday and Sunday at Congressional Country Club.

Entries are being received at the association offices, 16 McClellan place, Baltimore, or by Dr. R. A. Kelly, local vice president, at the Congressional Club. The entry fee is $3, with post entries $5.

Flights will be provided for all qualifiers. The course will be open for practice rounds on Thursday.

Jack Dempsey Pronounced Fit By His Pilot

Max Waxman Wants Bout to Be 10 Rounds Instead of 6

Atlanta, Ga., June 15.—Jack Dempsey is fit as a fiddle and ready to riot, in effect, was the comment of his manager, Max Waxman, today as plans were effected for the Manassa Mauler to go 10 rounds against Cowboy Luttrell, the wrestler, in Atlanta July 1.

Previously, Dempsey signed for only a six-round bout, but Waxman said the ex-champion of the heavyweight fistic domain appears in such fine fettle that he is willing to make the rounds a decade.

Meanwhile, Luttrell is reportedly working out at Tampa, Fla., and later this week is expected to pitch camp in Atlanta.

Dempsey is training in New York gyms, and also doing road work, Waxman revealed.

Jack has not fought since 1932, and the match was made only after Dempsey apparently became embittered at Luttrell as a result of the latter's actions in a wrestling match here which Dempsey referreed.

Louis Throws 'Party' For Godoy Thursday

Heavyweight Champion to Celebrate 3-Year Reign as King of the Fight World; Godoy Confident He'll Take Bomber This Time

By the Associated Press

New York, June 15.—Joe Louis is throwing a party in Yankee Stadium Thursday night to celebrate the end of the third year in his record reign as king of the fight world.

He'll have no cake to carve in the ring they're pitching out around second base. So the Bomber figures he'll carve Arturo Godoy instead.

He meets the crouching Chilean for 15 rounds or less in his eleventh defense of the world's heavyweight championship—an all-time total which already has doubled the "high" for successful title defenses by any of the 13 previous heavyweight champions since the Marquis of Queensbury made a science out of the art of scrambling wars.

Joe Breaks Jinx

Before him, the best of the lot in turning them back were Jim Jeffries, Jack Johnson and Jack Dempsey, who went to the post and came back winner five times each before taking on the No. 6 jinx. Louis, who took the title from old Jim Braddock in June of 1937, laughed at the "unlucky six" more than a year ago when he belted out old Jack Roper in Los Angeles.

He has planned quite a little celebration for the occasion all because he has a "mad on" against Godoy. Joe tangled with Godoy last February and, although coming off with a 15-round split decision, he was subjected to considerable ridicule for the way Godoy's crouching, "squat-tag" boxing baffled him.

"He made me look bad," Louis has explained, and, hurt as always when his pride has been touched by an opponent's unorthodox tactics, the one-time Alabama cotton-picker has wheeled out his big guns for this return go.

Godoy Is Confident

Godoy, on the other hand, probably is as confident a rival as Louis has ever faced. The former Chilean fisherman is convinced he took Joe's Sunday punches without getting his hair too mussed. So now he is of the definite opinion Louis doesn't even have to show Thursday night, because he hasn't a chance to win anyway.

The betting men, however, advise Arturo the arrogant to take off those rose-colored glasses. They've installed the "Brown Bomber" a 1-to-6 choice to make it two straight over the "South American way"—and even to break par for the Godoy course with an early lead.

Godoy's chief hope lies in the fact Louis is something less than the greatest ring general in the world. He "befuddles" easily and the Godoy style is a right smart "befuddler."

In many ways the two are physically similar, Louis is 26; Godoy admits to 27. They'll each weigh around the 200-pound mark and both stand a little over six feet. The chief difference lies in the damage each carriers in the cannon on the end of his arms.

Dunkelberger to Defend Crown In Southern Amateur Golf Play

Youthful Titleholder Has Been Working on Game in Preparation for Annual Tourney

By the Associated Press

Chattanooga, Tenn., June 15.—Wee Bobby Dunkelberger, a veteran in competition although but one year past the 'teen age, will defend his Southern amateur crown next week against some seven score golfers.

Almost all the outstanding amateurs in the South are expected Tuesday to start play for the championship, to be decided in match competition after 36 holes of medal play.

Before shoving off from his High Point, N. C., home the 120-pound Dunkelberger said: "I have been working on my game recently and hope to have it at its peak to successfully defend my title."

Competition encountered in six amateur tournaments and two opens during the year have given the champion a taste of fireworks and at the same time offered little encouragement to those who would dethrone him. Dunkelberger went to the semi-finals in five of the six amateur events, including the North and South at Pinehurst, the Dixie at Miami and the championship of Club Champions at St. Augustine. Also, he was medalist and winner of the tournament at Ormond Beach.

The country club's layout here, extending over some 6,500 yards with its par 70, favors the golfer who relies on the woods and approaching irons to offset a short game and that is just the style of play that won the title last year in Louisville.

Many Upsets in Past

History of the tournament, now in its thirty-eighth year, records more than its share of upsets with the crowning of "unknowns"—Dunkelberger being in this class when he defeated Johnny Cummings, of Memphis, last year in the finals after most favorites bowed in the early rounds.

Cummings captured the Memphis City championship last week, adding it to the 1939 State title, to serve notice that he is not to be overlooked in the listing of favorites. Other strong contenders expected from Memphis are Carey Middlecoff, finalist in the city meet; Emmet Spicer and Chasteen Harris, both former Southern champions.

Johnny Burke Beats Strafaci For Golf Title

Former Hoya Player Wins Metropolitan Amateur Crown

By the Associated Press

Purchase, N. Y., June 15.—John P. Burke, red-headed Providence youth who recently got his degree at Georgetown University, today annexed the Metropolitan Amateur golf championship by defeating 25-year-old Tommy Strafaci, Brooklyn public links player, 3 and 1.

BURKE

Burke, who won the intercollegiate title two years ago and will again be a candidate for honors when the college boys get together at Manchester, Vt., June 24-29, had to wage a stern uphill fight in order to overthrow the little Brooklyn youth who is a brother of Frank, winner of the crown for the last two years.

Burke added the important New York title to his intercollegiate crown and many others, including the Rhode Island Open and Amateur and the District of Columbia Amateur championship, won in 1938. He piloted the Georgetown team to the Eastern Intercollegiate title last month.

Betty Jameson Wins Trans-Miss.

ing an array of spectacular shots. Betty held a 1-up lead three times during the morning trip.

Seven one-putt greens by the Minneapolis redhead helped sway the early putting duel, although Betty slipped in three from between 3 and 25 feet out. The sturdy Texas girl, who also defeated Miss Berg in the finals of the 1937 transmississippi, came back with her sizzling putter working wonders in the afternoon and blistered the out nine with a 3 under 35 to regain a 1-up lead as they headed into the home stretch.

Cool and deliberate, Betty hung up a record for the day of 32 pars, 11 birdies and 3 bogeys, for a 36-hole total of 146 (73—73), 8 under women's par and only 4 over men's par.

Patty had 16 pars, 13 birdies and 7 bogeys, for a pair of 74's. She qualified with the same 74 Monday, while Miss Jameson was medalist with a 73.

Kessler May Withdraw From Coaching Duties at Tech High

Legal Post Is Likely For Mentor

Court and Diamond Coach Awaits Word From Examination; Starred as Student

By Bill Burnett

Washington's scholastic coaching ranks are due for at least one major change during the 1940-41 season, it was revealed yesterday, when it was learned that McKinley High's Bruce Kessler, basketball and baseball guide, may withdraw from coaching to confine his efforts to teaching law.

For the last three years one of the most popular and effective mentors Tech has had, Kessler waits only for word of marks on a recent exam before making his final decision. As only he and Stanley Collins, athletic director at Hine Junior High, are in the race for the legal instructorships, the chances of his leaving Tech's athletic staff were thought highly probable.

Member of Bar

Besides holding a master's degree at Columbia, Kessler owns an LL. B. at Southeastern and is a member of the District Bar Association. He was an all-around athletic star at Tech and later at American University.

His long connection with Tech, as a matter of fact, is one of the few factors holding Kessler to his coaching job. If he received an appointment as legal instructor in the high schools, he would necessarily go wherever assigned. His first love has always been his alma mater, though several times recently he has expressed a desire to get out of coaching. Main reason was the extreme physical tension under which a schoolboy coach must labor.

Teams Near Top

Observers who have watched the bespectacled Kessler master-mind his Manual Trainer teams the last three years know him as the fiercest bench-battler of all schoolboy leaders. With little material he has kept Trainer cage and diamond clubs well up in the interhigh family. He also has acted as assistant to Coaches "Rusty" Thompson and Arty Wondrack with the grid squad.

Several out-of-town prospects have been mentioned prominently as successor to Kessler, but at least two local men are in the running. An appointment will probably not be made until the start of next school term, along with the designation of an athletic head for the new Calvin Coolidge High which will open at that time.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, June 15.—The thrilling escape of Ducky Medwick from that concentration camp in St. Louis, and his safe arrival in the verdant pastures of Brooklyn, brings up the delicate point of the exact measures a player can take to get himself a better job in baseball.

CONSIDINE

Medwick, whose lifetime batting average is .338, and who soared as high as .374 in 1937, was hitting .304 when Larry MacPhail bought him the other day. His fielding, once of a dynamic sort, had deterioriated almost from the day that Brooklyn first began flirting with him. Last year his manager inflicted on him the supreme insult by taking him out of a game in the ninth inning, as a defensive gesture.

Bill Terry and a lot of other baseball men—including his new boss and friend, Leo Durocher—concluded that he was loafing his way out of those Cardinal handcuffs. But Medwick, whose surly disposition wasn't improved by eight years of that St. Louis sun, hotly denies this and promises to make Terry, at least, eat those words. Although if Ducky now gets hot for the Brooklyns he will only be bearing out what Terry said about him, that he deliberately laid down in order to escape.

Medwick points out that his gradual decline was not the result of his knowledge that the Dodgers were after him, nor of his knowledge of the fact that even the brazen Cardinal owners could not sell him when he was going good. He says his playing skill was hurt by the way he was managed, treated, and insulted by salary offers equal only to the stipend of Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes.

The odds are that he's telling the truth. His dissatisfaction with the Cardinals probably tempered the enthusiasm with which he once used to roam the outfield.. At least he stopped running into fences. But it is doubtful if he ever loafed up there at the plate. No natural hitter ever did. It's chemical with them: Some mysterious and overpowering force which makes them clamp their jaws shut and swing from their ankles when they see a ball that's good to hit. No feeling of rebellion against the way the firm is treating him could stay the hand of a natural hitter about to swing on a "cripple." That .304 of Medwick's is honest. Never doubt it.

There probably have been a few cases of self-sabotaging, but precious few. And hardly any since the owners—in their desperation to save the game—turned over to Judge Landis powers that are simply incredible. We know of one big league manager who sidled up to a player on another team one day and whispered, "Do what you can to make 'em want to trade you." The player was so shocked that he redoubled his playing efforts thereafter, for he feared that somehow the story might get around and that the judge would bar him for life if there was any reason to believe he was soldiering on his job.

All of the owners in the big leagues covet certain ball players, but none would dare to communicate this information to the player himself, and urge him to loaf himself off the other club. For this would strike at the gizzard of the thing that holds the baseball business together—that highly undemocratic player-contract—and an aroused Landis, if he so chose, could simply exterminate the guilty owner with a sweep of his arm.

Only player we ever knew who could go about where he pleased in the big leagues was (and is) Buck Newsom, self-effacing ace of the Detroit Tigers pitching staff. No one has ever examined Newsom's eyes, but even a casual inspection of them will show that they are constructed in such a way as to make the grass on the other side of any fence take on an irresistable attraction. Buck has been with Brooklyn, the Cubs, the Browns, Washington, Red Sox and Detroit and won for all of them. He came within a hair's breadth of being with the Yankees, and probably will make it someday.

Minneapolis Ups Batting Mark to .319

Mighty Millers Lead American Association; Estalella Near Top

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 15.—Minneapolis stepped up its impressive team batting average two more points to a mighty .319 figure in the last week as Miller sluggers continued their powerhouse tactics.

Unofficial averages including games of Wednesday showed Catcher Otto Denning ahead in the individual race for the second successive week. Denning had a mark of .383, two points off his rating of last week, but still 13 better than that of his nearest rival, Johnny Lucadello, of Toledo.

Five other Minneapolis hitters—Roberto Estalella, Huck Geary, Bob Fausett, Harvey Walker and Phil Weintraub—also held places within the league's top ten and with the aid of a sixth member, Ab Wright, controlled five of the eight departmental leads.

Lucadello's average was .370. Other leaders included Estalella, .365; Geary, .361; Phil Rizzuto, Kansas City, .349; Fausett, .344; Harry Walker, Columbus, .342; Harvey Walker, .341; Weintraub, .338; Ted Gullic, Milwaukee, .328, and Eddie Morgan, St. Paul, 328.

Wright led the league in home runs, 12, and in runs batted in, 49. Estalella set the pace in three other divisions, having scored 53 runs, totalled 16 bases and hit 18 doubles.

Two Kansas City athletes held the other major departmental leads, Rizzuto in stolen bases with 15, and hits, with 74, and Jerry Priddy in triples, with 7.

Another Kansas City player, Don Hendrickson, had five victories and no defeats to top the pitchers.

Just as Minneapolis maintained its hitting supremacy, Louisville still was the fielding leader with a team average of .979. Kansas City got six more double plays to run its first place total to 67.

Martin Buxby Enters Orange Lawn Finals

South Orange, N. J., June 15 (AP).—Martin Buxby, of Miami, advanced today to the final round of the Orange Lawn Tennis Club invitation men's singles tourney by defeating S. Ellsworth Davenport 3d, Forest Hills, 6-2, 6-3.

Buxby will meet top-seeded Frank Bowden, of New York, tomorrow.

Jack Sanford Tops Piedmont Batting Race

Charlotte Star Raps Ball for .374 Mark; Durham Ace Second

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., June 15.—Add to your consistent hitters Jack Sanford, Charlotte's rugged first baseman.

Whaling the horsehide with abandon, Sanford continued to hold his Piedmont League batting leadership this week, inching his already imposing average another two points to .374.

Joe Bestudik, of Durham, was in second place with .361, averages compiled through games of June 12 by Howe News Bureau showed. Van Barrington of Durham dropped 11 points and into third spot with .357, Ernie Horne, of Richmond, advanced to fourth place with .348, and John Pesky, of Rocky Mount, was fifth with .345, and continued to lead in hits with 78.

Hank Schluter, of Portsmouth, still was ahead in total bases with 116, while Mike Natisin, of Asheville, grabbed the lead in runs batted in with 48. Amil Brinsky, of Winston Salem, and Sammy Gentile, of Rocky Mount, tied with 17 doubles each. Bobby Rhawn, of Asheville, has scored most runs, 151, and Alex Monchak, of Portsmouth, was best base stealer with 12.

Shortstop Sherrard Robertson, of Charlotte, has no batting average to brag about (.278) but has proven himself one of the league's most dangerous power hitters. He was out in front this week with 13 homers, and has driven in 45 runs.

Charlotte was first in team batting with .278, and Asheville in fielding with .965.

Ken Burkhart, of Asheville, with six wins and one loss, topped the loop's pitchers.

Roller Derby Comes to End Here Tonight

The fastest and fiercest skating of the series is promised for tonight when the Roller Derby concludes a 27-night run at Riverside Stadium with another match between the Washington Pawnees and the Chicago Aztecs. The match will start at 8:15.

Surprise features have been planned, according to the promoters, who announce that fans tonight will be treated to jam sessions minus time limits and other restrictions. This, they say, will lead to more rough action than has been seen yet in the derby.

Preparations have been made to handle a capacity crowd, although Manager Harry Keele has announced that the free list has been suspended.

Aztecs Tie Up Series at 13-All

The Chicago Aztecs swept all four points in open house last night to turn back the Washington Pawnees in the second last game of their Roller Derby series before 3,000 spectators at Riverside Stadium, 15 to 11.

The teams are to enter tonight's final game of this 27 night series in a 13-all game deadlock and with Washington leading in points scored, 348 to 345. Tonight's game starts at 8:15 o'clock and will feature jam sessions without time limits and several surprise numbers.

THE WAR IN EUROPE

Germans Take Paris, See Victory Near In Battle of France

By Edward T. Folliard

"The mortal enemy of our nation (is) France."—Adolph Hitler in "Mein Kampf."

As the forty-first week of the war came to a close, the mighty German army appeared to be writing a postscript to Hitler's chapter on France—a postscript in the form of an obituary for the France of "liberte, egalite, et Fraternite."

Paris had fallen. So had the citadel of Verdun. In ten days Hitler's warriors had conquered more of France than the Kaiser's troops conquered in four years. The Nazi legions—running far ahead of their time-table—were making a frontal assault on the Maginot Line, and driving a wadge behind it, and it appeared that the French might have to abandon that costly bastion.

With the bulk of France's war factories gone, with most of her ports gone or threatened, with 7,500,000 refugees seeking food and shelter in the southern provinces, the French cabinet was reported to be locked in a bitter quarrel over the question of surrendering or staying in the war.

France's only hope was the United States. Premier Paul Reynaud said as much in an anguished final appeal for "clouds of of war planes from across the Atlantic to crush the evil force that dominates Europe." Privately, American officials said that this country was in no position to send "clouds" of planes—at least, not yet.

"We know what a high place ideals hold in the life of the great American people," said Reynaud. "Will they hesitate yet to declare themselves against Nazi Germany?"

If this was a plea that America declare war on Germany, it landed on soil that was hardly ready for it. Americans are overwhelmingly pro-Ally in this war, but according to Dr. George Gallup's poll they are also overwhelmingly opposed to getting into it. On May 28, more than two weeks after Germany had invaded Holland and Belgium, Gallup's surveyors asked a cross section of Americans this question:

"Do you think the United States should declare war on Germany and send our Army and Navy abroad to fight?"

Ninety-three per cent answered "No." Thus there would have to be a complete reversal of sentiment before this country would draw its sword.

As the Germans took Paris and continued relentlessly after the retreating French army, rumors flew around Europe that France would make a separate peace. German propagandists were encouraging the rumors.

Great Britain, "next" on Hitler's martial agenda, hoped that France would continue to fight, but she was prepared to accept without recrimination any decision that France should make.

Britain, said her highest officials, would fight on alone if necessary.

"It will not be on the dry land of Europe that this war will be won," said Harold Nicolson, parliamentary secretary of the Ministry of Information. "It will be upon the seas and in the air, in distant continents, so soon as unlimited resources of the British Empire and of the Americans can be mobilized to turn the scale."

Britain's anger was continuing to rise. Canada's ire also was up, but not enough to induce her to adopt conscription of men.

A column of smoke, rising from the chimney of the Italian Embassy in London, was a portent of the ghastly things to come for the Allies in the forty-first week of the war.

Giuseppe Bastianini, the Italian Ambassador to the Court of St. James, was making a fire of certain papers and documents from the embassy files. Hence the smoke on such a warm June day.

In Rome, a few hours later, Benito Mussolini swaggered to a balcony of the Plazzo Venezia, and in shrill tones proclaimed to his nation of 45,000,000 that Italy had gone to war against the "plutocratic, reactionary democracies of the West."

The Duce made no effort to camouflage his motive in lining up with Nazi Germany. He was going into the war for loot. The war, he said, was but a phase of the Nazi-Fascist "revolution."

"It is a battle of poor peoples with many arms," he said, "against those who are starving us and who ferociously hold a monopoly of all the riches and all the gold on earth.

"This is a battle of fertile, youthful peoples against sterile peoples turning toward the twilight; it is a battle between two centuries and two ideas."

In England, France and the United States, the minds of statesmen seized on the same figure of speech; France, already sinking to her knees, had been stabbed in the back. But Mussolini had answered this in advance.

"Our conscience," he said, "is absolutely tranquil."

The entry of Italy, with her 2,000,000 trained soldiers, her 4,000 planes and her not inconsiderable fleet with its 120 submarines, came on June 10.

It was a day, as Walt Whitman said of that July day in 1861 when the Union troops were trounced at Bull Run, "bitterer than gall—a crucifixion day!" France's ordeal was compared to "the ordeal of a zebra rent simultaneously by the claws of a lion and the rending, gnawing teeth of a hyena."

* * * *

For that matter, it was an entire week of dire tidings, with each day darker than the one before for the Allies. This was the calendar:

SUNDAY—Allied troops withdrew from Narik, thus yielding all of Norway to the Germans. The troops, warships and planes were needed in the Battle of France. During the retreat the German battleships Gneisenau and Scharnhorst sank the British aircraft carrier Glorious, two destroyers, a tanker and a transport—the heaviest day's blow to Allied sea power since the war began.

MONDAY—As Italy entered the war, the mighty German army—now reported using nearly 2,000,000 troops—moved southward like an avalanche going downhill, with two pincers reaching out for Paris.

TUESDAY—Generalissimo Weygand, having cried the "last quarter-hour has come," ordered his imperiled troops north of Paris to fall back to the Marne near Chateau Thierry. The rain for which the French had been praying came, but it merely refreshed the Germans. Their tanks smashed over the Seine. British planes bombed Italian air bases in Libya and Eritrea, and Italian planes showered bombs on the British naval base at Malta. The French government left Paris for Tours.

WEDNESDAY—The Germans drew to within 12 miles of Paris. Thousands of Allied soldiers, including a remnant of the B. E. F., were captured on the Channel coast south of Dieppe. Rheims fell and also Rouen. German divisions were being poured into the battle against dog-tired French poilus who had been fighting without relief for a week.

THURSDAY—The French declare Paris to be an "open" city—that is to say, an undefended city. Under The Hague convention of 1907, it would thus be spared attack or bombardment. The Germans smashed to within eight miles of Paris, and at the same time drove westward to Chalons-sur-Marne, the town where America's Unknown Soldier was selected after the World War. The Germans were now threatening to flank the Maginot Line.

FRIDAY—Paris fell. German troops, riding dusty tanks, armored cars and trucks, rolled down the Champs Elysees on the tenth day of the Battle of France—four days ahead of schedule. Le Havre also fell, and it looked as if Cherbourg and Brest were doomed. The French government moved from Tours to Bordeaux.

SATURDAY—The Germans claimed to have captured several important forts in the Maginot Line, and there was talk in Allied quarters of abandoning that "invulnerable" barrier and throwing its defenders into the battle line. Allied warships bombarded Italian coastal points near Genoa.

The fall of Paris, nerve center of France, must have been a terrible blow to the adoring French. From a military standpoint, however, Paris does not have decisive strategical importance, and the Germans were quick to say so. The objective, they said, was not the capture of cities, but the "destruction" of the French army.

What is now the outlook for France and Britain?

A distinguished retired American general, one who played an important role in the World War, expressed the opinion on Thursday that the French ought to be able to hold out for "some time." However, he attached an important "if" to the statement. They ought to be able to hold out, he said, if Weygand could keep his army intact.

Weygand, though falling back under the German hammer blows, appeared to military men to be doing a masterful job in maneuvering his battered and hungry troops. For a time it appeared certain that a large part of his army was about to be trapped north of Paris. But then came the order to fall back to the Marne and the situation was saved.

By Friday the French were falling back to the Loire and at the same time trying to hold a line east of Paris that would prevent a flanking of the Maginot Line.

How long could the French morale hold up under the battering from Hitler's war machine? That the French poilus are courageous is a fact demonstrated over the centuries. But they are also given to thinking and analyzing.

In the spring of 1918, as Liddell Hart tells in his "War in Outline," a mutiny broke out in the French army and spread until 16 corps were affected. The trouble came when Nivelle insisted on sending exhausted men into the line, and it was never quelled until Petain was appointed to succeed Nivelle.

* * * *

Generalissimo Weygand must have been convinced last week that the morale of his men was good, and that the French cause, though desperate, was not hopeless. It was reported that he appeared at a fateful meeting of the French cabinet on Wednesday night and persuaded the political leaders to continue the fight.

The French leaders decided to stay in the fray, but on two conditions: First, Britain would have to give every possible bit of help, and, second, the United States would have to do even more than extend "legal" aid.

Britain responded by rushing more and more troops to France, and such equipment as she could scrape together. In a statement that sounded like it came from the pen of Prime Minister Winston Churchill, the British government said:

"We renew to the French Republic our pledge and resolve to continue the struggle at all costs in France, on this island, upon the oceans, in the air and wherever it may lead us to the utmost of our limits and sharing together the burden of repairing the ravages of war."

Premier Reynaud, in a speech on Wednesday night, declared that France, wounded, had the right to turn to the other democracies and to say: "We have claims on you." Then came an appeal in which he appeared to be asking the United States to do more than it is allowed to do under the law.

"Each time that I have asked the President of the United States to increase in all forms the assistance permitted by law," Reynaud said, "he has generously complied, and it has been approved by his people.

"But today we are at a more advanced point. Today the life of France is at stake, at least France's essence of life. Our fight, each day more painful, has no further sense if in continuing we do not see even far away the hope of a common victory growing."

Reynaud, in an earlier message to Roosevelt, looked ahead to the possibility that the French government and maybe a large part of the French army might make their way to North Africa and continue the war from there.

He said that he and his colleagues had fled from Paris to avoid capture and to prevent Hitler from setting up a puppet government such as he has established in other conquered countries.

The summary for the week:

LAND

On the basis of its record, the German army of 1940 is the greatest military force of modern times. Actually, it is better than even its leaders thought it was, a fact illustrated by the circumstance that it has always achieved its objectives ahead of the time table.

True, the Germans always have outnumbered their foe and likewise always have had a superiority in weapons, particularly planes and tanks.

But that isn't the whole answer to their seeming invincibility. The German army is a marvel of coordination, from Hitler down to the rawest rookie. Their staff work, according to military men, has been superb. And no less brilliant has been the work of the Nazi expert who gives Hitler the green light on the weather.

The German army is the product of seven years of labor, seven years of sacrifice, seven years of teaching the Fatherland's young men how to hate and kill, while the British and French were squabbling about royal romances and social reforms.

The Allies were confident from the outset that it would be a "long war," and they behaved accordingly. Not until recently did the British register their 27-year-old men. The Germans meantime had mobilized men in their forties and fifties, and it is such oldsters who are now policing conquered territory while the younger men do the fighting.

The contrast in preparedness efforts on the home fronts was even more startling. In the years just before the war, French Communists just about crippled French production with their sitdown strikes and other tactics in the name of social progress. Meantime German factories were on a 70-hour week basis. Not until the Germans invaded Holland and Belgium did the British factories go all out in the matter of production.

However, it is not for Americans to criticize the French and British. Today this country is engaged in the greatest rearmament program in its history. Nevertheless, the Nation's leaders are insisting that this program be carried out without any retreat from the social reforms that have been placed on the statute books. No sacrifices have yet been asked unless it be in the matter of taxes.

Whatever may be the virtues of democracy in peace time, democracy is no match for totalitarianism in war time. The British have conceded that by belatedly setting up what amounts to a dictatorship.

The present plight of France, according to G. H. Archambault, of the New York Times, grows out of France's failure to harmonize its military and political policies.

Its military policy was based on the defensive and nothing but the defensive. Hence the Maginot Line.

Yet its political policy called for help to other countries which should suffer aggression. The two, according to Archambault, could not be reconciled, and he points to Holland and Belgium as a case in point.

When the French and British rushed to the aid of Holland and Belgium—both of which countries had refused to collaborate with them in a military way before the lightning struck them—they did just what the Germans wanted to them to do. That is, they so weakened the defense along the Meuse that the Germans were able to break through and set their trap in Flanders.

Remarked Archambault:

"It is highly probable that had the French—with the relatively small British Expeditionary Force—remained behind their field works on the one hand, and the Maginot Line on the other, the entire situation would have been changed. The Allies had abandoned the initiative to the enemy; they had abandoned their resolve to fight a defensive war and to avoid 'reckless offensives.'"

The Germans have never lost that initiative. A week ago today, it appeared that the French were making them pay dearly for every yard of ground they took. There were stories of how the French 75's and the French planes were wrecking German tanks by the hundreds.

Undoubtedly the Germans have paid heavily, but they expected to pay and were prepared to pay. They had the reserves of men and equiment that the French did not have.

Under normal circumstances, the attacking army must expect to lose more men than the defender—maybe as many as 3 to 1. But many military men think this ratio has not prevailed in the present battle.

Because of German superiority in mechanized and air power, the French casualties, it was believed, probably were larger in proportion than those of the Germans.

The capture of Paris, it was reported, brought the first real outburst of enthusiasm that Berlin has known since the war started. In the past, American correspondents have been struck by the behavior of the people of Berlin after Nazi triumphs. They seemed to regard a military victory as just another statistic.

But the fall of Paris brought "jubilation" in Berlin. Flags fluttered from every building, church bells tolled, and radios blared Nazi hymns and the "Watch on the Rhine."

Yesterday the Nazi battle flag flew over Versailles Palace, "in which German destiny was shaped in 1871 and where the seal was set on Germanshame in 1919." It was the eighth invasion of France's beautiful capital. Julius Caesar first stormed it in 52 B. C. Clovis, the Frank general, captured it in the fifth century after it had become a Roman outpost, and then the barbarians from the north took it over.

The English, under Henry VI, took Paris in 1422, and despite the attempts of Joan of Arc to recapture the city in 1429, it remained in English control until 1643, when the city was restored to the King of France, Charles VII.

After Napoleon's defeat at Waterloo, the victorious Allied armies entered Paris in July, 1815, and gave the throne to Louis XVIII. Then came the last occupation previous to that of Friday—the march into Paris by von Moltke's armies after the conclusion of the Franco-Prussian War of 1870-71, a conflict that cost France Alsace-Lorraine and a billion dollars in gold.

SEA

When Italy entered the war last Monday, some naval experts thought that the Franco-British fleet in the Mediterranean would play a more or less passive role designed to strangle Italy.

Yesterday, however, it appeared that both French and British warships had gone into action off Genoa. Could it be that the British and French naval commanders, fearing that the French fleet might be surrendered to Hitler, had determined to draw the Italians into a fight?

From Cairo came a report that

PREMIER BENITO MUSSOLINI

Last Monday Il Duce, before a cheering throng of Black Shirts, proclaimed to the world Italy's decision to join her axis partner—Germany—in war against the "plutocratic, reactionary" democracies of Britain and France.

The Battle of France

AROUUND THE HISTORIC Arc de Triomphe (top left) in Paris last week crawled dusty tanks with the swastika of Nazi Germany emblazoned on their sides. Close behind came bright-faced German troops (above), their hobnailed shoes drumming endlessly on the hard streets, as Hitler's forces took over the French capital. France's armies, falling back before the Nazi onslaught, were prepared to take up new positions south of Paris, along the Loire River. The shaded area on the accompanying map shows German-held territory in the Battle of France.

Mark Sullivan Says

Still Anybody's Race For G.O.P. Nomination

We are seeing a remarkable thing. During the first two weeks in June, up to the time this is printed, with the Republican National Convention only ten days ahead—at this time we see candidates for the Presidential nomination still campaigning. This late campaigning takes place after literally every primary has been held, after the delegates to the convention have been chosen.

MARK SULLIVAN

We see Senator Taft going to Tennessee several weeks after the delegates from that State were chosen, and going to other States where likewise the delegates have been chosen. Under the same condition, we see Mr. Dewey doing the same thing in West Virginia and other States. We see Mr. Wendell Willkie going from city to city, in widely separated parts of the country, to address public meetings. We see Mr. Frank Gannett continuing right up to the present week that remarkable series of campaign trips which have carried hom some 50,000 miles.

Now what does it mean when candidates continued to campaign, to keep up their public speech-making, long after the delegates are chosen? The names of those thousand delegates are perfectly well known, and their postoffice addresses. They could be addressed by letter much more directly than they can be reached by public speeches. Almost, they could be called on in person, individually, with not much more trouble than the speech-making trips which the candidates continue to make.

In the cases of some of the candidates, this continued campaigning reflects individual conditions. Probably Mr. Gannett keeps up his speech-making in part because of his great earnestness, the intensity of his fear that America is in peril, his passion to make the people know their peril—a passion which has caused Mr. Gannett's speeches to be at once a strikingly well informed and deeply stirred indictment of the New Deal. Probably Mr. Willkie keeps it up because he, too, with his exceptional power of thought, has a deep understanding of America's danger; and also perhaps in part because he made a late start in the Presidential race, and wishes to take every opportunity to make the people acquainted with him.

But as to all candidates, this last-minute campaigning reflects certain clear conditions, at once unusual and important.

It Is Still Anybody's Race

It means that no candidate has a mortgage on the nomination, nor even any material advantage over other aspirants—it is still anybody's race.

It means that practically all the delegates are open-minded, and will remain so until the convention is held—not more than a hundred or so out of the thousand delegates are bindingly committed to any candidates.

It means that the delegates, being open-minded, are still susceptible to public opinion. When Mr. Taft goes to Tennessee to make a public speech, and Mr. Dewey and the others make speeches in other States, their purpose is to make a favorable impression on the public, influence the already chosen delegates.

It means that this will be an unbossed convention, practically an unled one, a convention in which individual delegates from States will make up their own minds. If this convention were subject to leader domination, candidates and their friends would be talking to the leaders instead of making public speeches. That the delegates are unbossed and largely unled, is shown by many facts. In New York, in both parties, it is well known that the delegates this year are far from united, even behind their own candidate, Mr. Dewey, and even though that candidate has been commonly supposed to have a good chance.

This impression about the uncontrolled quality of the coming Republican convention, the open-mindedness of the delegates and the absence of strong leader influence, is borne out by a survey that has been made of the thousand delegates. The survey shows that an unusual proportion of them are persons not hitherto active in politics, and with high standings in their private careers and in their respective communities.

Convention Will Make Own Decision

Altogether, this coming convention contains the possibility that it may be a body having elevation in proportion to the seriousness of the times. Definitely, it contains the probability that the convention will make its own decision about who is the best nominee, after careful survey of not only the better known candidates but also ones who have not been active in the primaries.

During this present interval between the State primaries, the selection of the delegates and the meeting of the Republican convention, certain new condidtions have affected the relative standing of the delegates.

One is increased consciousness of the war in Europe and of America's being drawn close to it. This has affected Senator Vandenberg adversely, because he is the candidate who, months ago, went farthest in the direction of isolation; it is realized now, and was freely stated by Senator Vandenberg last Sunday night, that it is not now possible for America to practice isolation to the degree that Mr. Vandenberg and others thought desirable months ago.

Similarly, though not to the same degree, the war has affected Mr. Dewey adversely. He, too, in a position taken months ago, went farther toward isolation than seems practicable under the now changed condition. Also, the seriousness of the problems raised by the war has revived early apprehensions about Mr. Dewey's lack of experience in national affairs.

The war, and the seriousness of the problems it entails, the need for experience, accounts in part for the marked momentum of talk about Mr. Hoover.

Dewey Has Glamour; Taft Lacks It

Another new condition, affecting the relative chances of candidates is the likelihood that President Roosevelt will be the Democratic nominee. With him as the candidate they must oppose, the Republicans lay more emphasis on campaigning ability, aptitude for speech-making and popular appeal in their own nominee. This requirement works in favor of Mr. Dewey, he having made on the public an impression of campaigning vigor and striking personality.

On the other hand, the new requirement of personality and glamour works against Mr. Taft. It is felt that while Mr. Taft has ability and character, he would not have, as a campaigner, the kind of personality that invites comparison with Mr. Roosevelt.

Likelihood that Mr. Roosevelt will be the Democratic nominee markedly increases the attention paid Mr. Willkie. Mr. Willkie includes in his equipment an ability to fight Mr. Roosevelt in Mr. Roosevelt's own manner. From Mr. Willkie, Mr. Roosevelt would get as good as he gives.

Considerations such as these, about who would make the best candidate, and who would make the best President, and all the conditions of the time—all that is now occupying the minds of the persons composing what promises to be a remarkable convention.

Democrats Ahead in 41 States Today

By Dr. George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Copyright, 1940, by American Institute of Public Opinion. All Rights Reserved.

Princeton, N. J., June 15. A new State-by-State political checkup—conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion since Adolf Hitler launched his blitzkrieg attack against the West a month ago—points today to a decided increase in the strength of the Democratic Party throughout the United States.

DR. GALLUP

It is still five months until the November elections. Neither party has nominated its candidates yet. Hence the Institute survey is nothing more than a pre-convention "preview" of party strength. The entire picture may be altered in the weeks to come, just as it has been altered in the last month. Nevertheless, the survey shows that the Democrats are going into the campaign with an impressive initial advantage.

If the election were being held today—and if it were being decided entirely on the question of party strength and apart from the platforms and candidates—the survey indicates that the Democrats would lead in 41 States out of a total of 48. They would capture about 488 out of a total of 531 electoral votes.

How this contrasts with political sentiment only eight weeks ago, before the blitzkrieg, is shown by reference to the Institute's State-by-State survey of late April. At that time the Democratic Party was ahead in 31 States, but the margin was so close that a shift of only 1 per cent in a few crucial States would have tipped the scales to the Republicans.

But the shift has been in the opposite direction. Preliminary studies conducted by the Institution indicate that the chief reasons may lie in the popularity of President Roosevelt's handling of foreign policy. It is interesting to note, incidentally, that there has also been a sharp rise in third-term sentiment in the same period of time, as reported in The Washington Post June 5. Whereas 47 per cent said they would vote for a Roosevelt third term in April, 57 per cent were in favor of a third term in the latest study.

Another possible factor is the circumstance that while the Democratic Party has a recognized leadership in President Roosevelt today, the Republican Party is still engaged in the task of selecting its national leadership for the 1940 campaign. Further Institute studies, beginning immediately after the Republican National Convention, will show how the selection of a flesh-and-blood Republican nominee affects the political picture.

Democratic Vote Was Still Higher in May

Coincidental with the German drive against France and England, however, the Institute survey shows an average Democratic gain of 4 percentage points throughout the United States. The Institute asked a cross-section of voters in every State:

"Which party would you like to see win the Presidential election this year?"

The trend since the April survey has been as follows:

April Survey ..	Favoring Democrats 54%	Favoring Republicans 46%
Today ..	58	42

One highly significant fact, however, which tempers this picture somewhat, is that public opinion immediately after the German invasion of Holland and Belgium was even more Democratic than the figure shown today. First returns between May 10 and May 24 showed 59 per cent favoring the Democratic Party; hence there has been a slight drop in Democratic strength in the last two weeks.

There also remains a sizable number of voters (16 per cent) who say they are undecided about their party choice at present.

Shift Has Come In East Especially

A comparison of the political map today with eight weeks ago shows that by far the greatest percentage gains for the Democratic Party have occurred in the populous East and in the States bordering the Great Lakes.

Ten States have shifted over the line to the Democrats in this period, the survey shows. With the percentage gain for the Democrats in each case, these States are: Pennsylvania, 6 points; Illinois, 9 points; Ohio, 5; Michigan, 5; Massachusetts, 4; New Jersey, 8; Wisconsin, 8; Connecticut, 7; Rhode Island, 6, and North Dakota, 7.

It is in this general area that the so-called "Independent Vote" is greatest, and recent events have apparently influenced a large share of this group of men and women toward the Democratic side.

In the South, on the other hand, where Democratic Party regularity is almost an article of faith, opinion has changed very little since the blitzkrieg. An average of 77 voters in every hundred favored the Democrats there six weeks ago; 78 in every hundred favor them today.

Republican Nucleus Of States Is Small

As the Republicans assume their uphill job, the nucleus of States now leaning to the G. O. P. is small—Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont in New England, and South Dakota, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska in the Middle West.

Nine States with a total of 115 electoral votes could be dislodged from the Democratic column, however, by an average Republican shift of 4 percentage points. These include Illinois, New Jersey, Ohio, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, Rhode Island, Massachusetts and North Dakota.

The reader should remember, furthermore, that some margin of error may be involved in every sampling operation, no matter how carefully conducted, due to the size of the sample itself. In the present survey the statistical probabilities are at least 95 in 100 that the average error per State resulting from the size of the sample will not exceed 4 per cent.

Actually, in 11 State surveys conducted by the Institute since the election of 1936 the error from all causes (cross-section errors as well as errors due to size of sample) has averaged only 3.1 per cent.

The great remaining question is how the selection of party candidates will affect the basic political picture between now and November. Still another factor is the progress of the war in Europe. Thus far the war seems to have been followed by increases in Democratic strength. More than a year ago, in April, 1939, the Institute found that small majority (51 per cent) favored a Republican victory in 1940. Immediately after the outbreak of war last fall this figure had changed to 57 per cent favoring a Democratic victory.

G.O.P. Voters Oppose Later Convention

By Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., June 15.—Rejection of the suggestion to postpone the Republican national convention until August, in order to give the Republicans a better chance to assess the issues raised by the war, is voted today by a majority of G. O. P. voters in a Nation-wide survey of the American Institute of Public Opinion.

A majority of those interviewed said they would prefer to see the Republicans meet in Philadelphia as scheduled on June 24.

Nevertheless, a very substantial number of Republicans declared that the suggestion—first made by national committeemen and newspaper commentators—appealed to them as sound tactics.

Voters in a cross-section of the United States were asked the following question:

"It has been suggested that the Republican Party postpone their Presidential convention from June to August of this year, in order to wait and see what is going to happen in Europe. Do you approve or disapprove of this proposal?"

The Republican vote was:

In favor of postponement	43%
Opposed to postponement	57%

About one Republican in four said he was undecided on the question.

The survey found signs of a real Republican dilemma on the question of holding their convention later. It was pointed out by some voters that this would give the G. O. P. an opportunity of meeting after the Democratic convention, rather than before, and would permit them to gauge Republican strategy accordingly.

Others commented that "things are happening so fast in Europe that nobody can tell what the platform should be—let alone who the candidate should be."

Majority Want G. O. P. Leader Named Soon

On the other hand, persons holding the majority view argued that "the sooner we meet and select our standard-bearer, the sooner we'll be a real opposition party."

One Republican businessman, interviewed in New York City, declared that a postponment would "merely hand the country over to the Democrats while we are trying to make up our minds."

History has provided at least one interesting precedent for such a postponement, and curiously enough it was the Democrats who took the step. In the Presidential race of 1864, in the midst of the Civil War, the Democrats delayed their convention until late summer in the hope that the outcome of military expeditions under Gens. Grant and Sherman would be determined, thus clarifying the major political issues.

The Democrats finally met and nominated Gen. George B. Mc Clellan, but the parallel is perhaps an unpleasant one for Republican strategists since Mc-Clellan was badly defeated by President Lincoln the following November. Grant and Sherman, as it happened, had been brilliantly successful in the meantime, and the country proved to be in no temper "to change horses crossing a stream."

Ernest Lindley Says

'Interventionists' Want War Declaration

Senator Wheeler has warned that if the Democratic Party becomes the war party he will bolt it. In that determination he is not alone.

To support the Allies energetically by means short of war is one thing. The Nation now seems to be overwhelmingly in favor of that. But as it moves up to that line, the interventionists move ahead to outright advocacy of our entry into the war as a full belligerent. Thus, there is still a division of opinion on our policy with regard to this war—although at the present moment many citizens may not be sure on which side of the line they ought to take their stand.

ERNEST LINDLEY

Agitation for an open declaration of war by the United States is being carried on both openly and covertly. There are men, influential men, in the Administration who favor a declaration of war now on Germany and Italy. There are others, no less influential, who believe that such a declaration would be the height of folly. The Roosevelt Administration, and its supporters on foreign policy, are not a war party. Not yet, at least. But it is not beyond the realm of probability they will become a war party.

The arguments for our immediate entry into the war as an acknowledged belligerent are familiar. Briefly, some of them are:

Sooner or later, we will have to fight Germany. If the Nazis knock out France and Great Britain, they will not stop. Like every other aggressive, highly armed, state in history they will keep on going as long as they can. If we don't fight them across the ocean, we will have to fight them on this side of the Atlantic—and fight them without a friend to help us and with the probability that they will have as their Allies Japan and Italy, and perhaps Russia. If the French and British go down, we cannot hold Latin-America. Economic and military pressure, prestige, and fifth column activities, will establish the Nazi-Fascist influence in Latin-America. We will be pushed back to the Caribbean and imprisoned economically and in the military sense, the northern part of the hemisphere, vulnerable to attack, ripe for the kill before we have had a chance to arm ourselvs to withstand a simultanous attack across both oceans, combined with attacks from Latin-American bases. These arguments are essentially those which a few weeks ago were advanced by the advocates of aid to the Allies by all means short of war.

The final argument is that a declaration of war now would give the Allies the psychological shot of adrenalin which is indispensable to their survival for another few months, while we build up the means to rearm them as well as to arm ourselves. Morale is important. As I write it seems to be almost all the French army has left to fight with. And within a few weeks the morale of the British people may begin to be tested as it has not been tested in the entire history of the British Empire. But morale is not an adequate substitute for weapons. The bravest man in the world can't stop an aerial bomb with a tin hat, or a tank with a bayonet, or a bullet with a bare hand.

Morale Not Substitute For Weapons

The thinking of those who advocate our immediate entry into the war as an acknowledged belligerent is colored with the same faith in words, and ceremonial actions which has characterized most of the "interventionists" thought in this country for many years. It is the same type of thinking which thought the status quo could be preserved, or altered according to ethereal rules of justice, by debates in Geneva, which thought that the Kellogg Pact meant the end of wars, which believed that by denunciation or uplifting phrases the United States could make other peoples all over the globe behave according to our ideas, which believed that expanding nations could be checked by boycotts or by embargoes unsupported by armed force, and which thought that Ethiopia bore the same relationship to the security and welfare of the United States that the British fleet does.

The vital error of most American "interventionists" was the same as that of the people of Holland and Norway. They were blind to the paramount importance of armed force. Holland and Norway apparently thought they were safe as neutral nations. They made almost no effort to prepare to defend themselves. They forgot that they were secure only if the nations which were armed chose to leave them alone. Just as most of the American advocates of collective action to restrain aggressors and introduce "right and justice" throughout the world forgot that, in the last analysis, such a policy had to be backed by overwhelming armed force.

Any foreign policy by any nation is not only futile but dangerous which does not bear a close relationship to the ability of the nation to support it by armed force. During the last 20 years there have been unrealistic isolationists who thought that the United States could be defended by setting up rows of guns along our coasts. But they have been infinitely less numerous than their polar opposites: those who advocated our meddling in affairs all over the world without regard to our readiness to back our moralizing or our denunciations with effective armed force.

Declaration Would Commit Us

Every historical precedent, every counsel of wisdom, advises us against an instant declaration of war against Nazi Germany. For by such a declaration we would commit ourselves to the reconstruction of Europe, in the pattern of the Allies—whatever that may be—no matter what the cost to us. And who is wise enough to say what would be the desirable reconstruction of Europe, even if it could be effected without the loss of another life?

A generation ago we put the British and French on top of Europe and most of the rest of the world. At the end of the war, we helped to establish what we regarded as a not too unjust peace. At least we helped to restrain the French from a peace which would have been far more severe to Germany. And at the same time, we wholeheartedly supported the idea of national self-determination—which was completely unworkable in central and eastern Europe, if not in Europe as a whole. Europe, and we, might be better off today, if Clemenceau had had his way. Who can say?

Certainly, Europe, and we, would be better off if the French army had moved into the Rhineland in 1936 when Hitler sent his own forces into that area in 1936. That was the turning point in the history of the World War preceding this one. For it destroyed the French domination of Europe. In effect, it gave Hitler not only Austria but Czecho-Slovakia and as much of Central and Southeastern Europe as he could take. It gave him the Ukraine if he could take it. For it meant the building of the West Wall, the separation of France from its eastern Allies. It was an unmistakable signal to Hitler to do as he liked, or could, in central and eastern Europe. This made sense. It may not have been the wisest policy, but it was defensible policy. What remains inexplicable is that the Allies, having adopted that policy, made the Polish alliance. The French already had an alliance with Poland, but it would have been ignored, as was the French alliance with Czecho-Slovakia, if the British had not stepped in to guarantee Poland.

If the Allies had not guaranteed Poland, the Polish government would have cooperated with Hitler in the attack on the Ukraine and perhaps Russia proper. What prevented this was the highly moral non-military-minded attitude of the advocates of collective action in Great Britain, France, and the United States. They stampeded the governments of Great Britain and France into reversing the policy of letting Hitler go east.

Can We Make Our Policy Effective?

We are now witnessing in Europe the horrible results of the chronic failure of high-minded interventionists to relate their policies to military realities. The blame does not apply to them alone, but they cannot escape a major share of it. The lesson from the current war, as from earlier history, is that our policy must bear a close relationship to our ability to make it effective. There is little or nothing that we could do by declaring war that we are not already doing in our capacity as a non-belligerent friend of the Allies.

In our national interest, our policy must be supple. We have a great interest in the survival of Allied naval power. And so we have interest in the survival of at least a core of the French army. How much of the little strength we now have in the air and on the ground—in the form of surplus weapons—we should throw into the fracas is a matter of military judgment.

It is noteworthy that we began to sell some of our Army and Navy planes to the Allies before Great Britain decided that the French front was worth the risk of airplanes and troops which it had been reserving for the defense of the British Isles.

During the coming weeks, our policy should be flexible and realistic. How much of our strength should be allotted to our outposts—or, unhappily perhaps our rear guard—in Europe? These are essentially questions of military judgment. A declaration of war now would tie our hands, commit us to objectives which we might never be able to achieve, and impair our ability to defend our vital strategic frontiers.

Knudsen, Defense Production Chief Is Just 'Plain Folk'

By Gerald G. Gross.

The Detroit office of William S. Knudsen was described as "spacious but plain" by an interviewer at the time of his elevation to the presidency of General Motors Corporation three years ago. Just "plain" will suffice for his new working quarters as a member of the National Defense Advisory Commission, housed though they are in the beautiful and ample Federal Reserve Board Building on Constitution avenue.

Plain, indeed, seems to be the word for Signius Wilhelm Poul Knudsen, provided the connotation of frankness, sincerity and lack of affectation is borne uppermost in mind. It is, then, in keeping with the character of this 61-year-old former bicycle repairman that his Washington office suite—to employ the elegant and conventional, but in this instance undeserved, noun—is rather small, simply furnished and stripped down to such essentials as a few chairs and a nudish desk decorated only with two telephones and a calendar pad.

Too often the public creates and nurtures a prejudice against men and women who prefer to mind their own business, their inherent restraint being mistaken for cool aloofness, even snobbery. One of the most misunderstood characters in public life, in this respect, was the former Ambassador from London to Washington, Sir Ronald Lindsay. A natural reserve, abetted by a hearing defect which caused him to miss some things spoken to him, resulted in the British diplomat's being catalogued unjustifiably as an inattentive, distant, superior sort of individual.

Happily, "Bill" Knudsen stands out as convincing proof that any general rule, or semblance of a rule, may have its exceptions. Conservative in deportment, loath to have his picture taken, and sparing of interviews but gracious to his questioners when they are received, the man whom President Roosevelt has placed in charge of defense production is little known to the American people and yet he is universally liked.

Has Reputation As Square Dealer

Maybe it's the reassuring warmth of his smile when that pair of Scandinavian blue eyes begins to dance. Or the patient understanding which their owner shows to both sides of a controversial question. No doubt his reputation as a square dealer has something to do with Knudsen's popularity and the fact that he started from scratch as a 20-year-old immigrant boy may be a factor.

Man's body undergoes many changes in four decades, yet it is difficult to visualize Knudsen's being rejected for enlistment in the Danish army because he was too thin. As of today, he weighs in at 230 pounds and stands 6 feet 3 inches tall. He is a man who calls for a second look, over the shoulder, when you pass him on the street or in a hotel lobby. Physical stature alone is not responsible. How many handsome specimens do your shoulders brush daily whom you don't even notice? Well, you men, anyway.

That "something" which seems to magnetize Knudsen, self-effacing though he would be, perhaps accounts for his success in the American automotive industry, in a mystical manner of speaking. It is a something which instills confidence in those working with and under him, and which provides a psychological tonic in the realization that "Knudsen's gone to bat for us now."

In Detroit, he reputedly cast aside office cares at the end of the day, which was around 5:30 p. m., going home to become the family man to Mrs. Knudsen and that one of their three daughters who is unmarried. For recreation, he indulged in an occasional round of golf and read widely of philosophy and literature.

The Washington routine is quite different. Six days a week he is at his second-floor office in the Federal Reserve Board Building by 8:15 a. m., fully a half-hour earlier than previously. Throughout the morning Army and Navy officers, technical experts in private industry and other business-bent individuals come in for conferences.

Keeps Working Until Darkness

At midday he goes to the building's dining room for lunch, then returns to his desk for more conferences, more correspondence to be signed and more orders to give until darkness signals the time to call it quits for the day. Rarely does he leave his office before 7:30 p. m.

Where, in Detroit, he left off work when the office closed and took time for recreational activities, Knudsen now carries over discussions into his hotel suite on occasional evenings and he has not touched a golf club since President Roosevelt announced his appointment to the Defense Advisory Commission on May 28, the day it was organized.

And yet, when friends here have asked him how his present duties compare in arduousness with those he left behind, he replies: "Oh, about the same," or in words to that effect.

Now staying at the Hotel Mayflower, he is negotiating for the lease of a house in the northwest section. It is not that he plans to bring his family here to live—they are still in Detroit—but that a house will be more roomy and comfortable for those nightly business conferences now being held in his hotel room.

In a city which heaps adulation upon its celebrites, particularly those with the charm and continental courtliness of a Knudsen, he has attended only one social function since his arrival. That was a tea given by Secretary of the Navy Charles Edison and Mrs. Edison.

It is typical of the man that he submitted a bare inch and a half of biographical data to "Who's Who." He could have had a column but he volunteered only a skeletonized sketch containing the bare essentials: Position, place of birth, jobs he's held, home and office addresses.

He's More Than Industrial Genius

There is, obviously, more to Knudsen than that. He is recognized as a genius of mass production, a forward looking trailblazer in the automobile field. In a vein less adjectival, he:

Left his native Denmark for the United States in 1899, disembarking in New York with a high school education, an itch to go hunting for a job, and $30 in his jeans.

Took his first job as a shipyard reamer in New York at $1.75 a day, though the bulk of his wage-earning experience in Copenhagen had been as a bicycle mechanic.

Switched to a railroad house, after the shipyard closed, remaining there until he obtained a position in a Buffalo, N. Y., bicycle plant, starting in as boss of the pedal department at $10.50 per.

Became a Henry Ford man in 1913 when that industrialist took over the Buffalo factory, retaining Knudsen in an executive role.

Remained with Ford until 1921, during most of which period he had charge of all 27 Ford assembly plants. He directed construction of "Eagle Boats" which the company produced in the World War, and filled a 2,500-ambulance order for Gen. John J. Pershing in three months. Henry Ford does not favor titles among his personnel, so Knudsen went titleless during his eight-year stand on that lot.

Joined the General Motors forces in 1922, first in an advisory capacity and then, after a few months, became vice president of the Chevrolet division — Ford's closest rival—in charge of operations.

Accepted election as president and general manager of Chevrolet and vice president and director of GMC in 1924.

Became President In Spring of '37

Became executive vice president of General Motors in 1933, after he had hiked production of Chevrolet cars and trucks from 100,000 to nearly 2,000,000 annually.

Succeeded Alfred Sloan as president of General Motors Corp. in the Spring of 1937.

One who suffixes his name with no academic initials, Knudsen has sharply defined ideas about education.

"My advice to a young man," he once said, "is to learn to do something with his hands and do it well. I don't care what it is. There isn't a thing in this room, if you look around, that hasn't been made by hands first. Even the machine is made by hand.

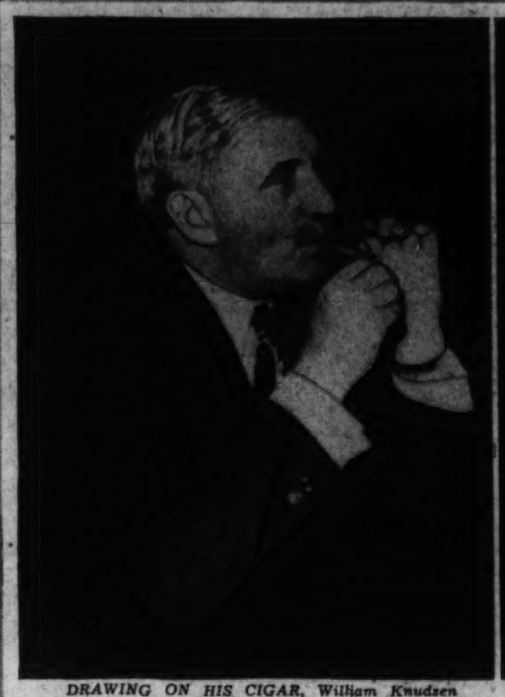
"If you can't make a product by hand, you can't make a machine that can make the product. We are going at things in the wrong way. In the first 10 years of a child's life he takes things apart and can't put them back together. In adolescence he has the urge to create, yet in the mating period, which is his most creative period, we send him to school and largely teach him how to play instead of how to work."

Because he adheres to the quaint belief that his personal life is of no interest to anyone else, there is a paucity of "Knudsen stories." Perhaps the most familiar one has to do with his arrival in New York.

The gangling lad of 20 was standing at the top of the gangplank, soaking up first impressions of "the land of opportunity."

"Hurry up, you—;" yelled an impatient member of the crew, or maybe it was a fellow passenger.

Knudsen obeyed and he hasn't slackened his pace since.



DRAWING ON HIS CIGAR, William Knudsen presents a picture of calm and ease which is typical of the man. But when action is needed, the 67-year-old production genius answers swiftly.

HIS DANCING BLUE SCANDINAVIAN EYES have made many a friend for William Knudsen. And his patient understanding of both sides of a question has contributed much to his popularity.

THE DANISH IMMIGRANT who rose to the presidency of a great American industrial organization is always gracious in answering questions, but he avoids the public spotlight as much as possible. His "square dealing," his down-to-the-earth quality make a deep impression on all who work with him.

WILLIAM KNUDSEN GETS A HEARTY HANDSHAKE from his "Chief"—Franklin Roosevelt. As production head of the National Defense Advisory Commission, the big 230-pound automobile executive supervises output of the Nation's key industries in the U. S. defense program.

New G.O.P. Foreign Policy May Emerge As European War Changes U.S. Opinion

By Robert C. Albright.

Groundswells of public opinion rolling with Europe's war may sweep back the Republican Party for the first time in years from a traditional isolationist stand.

As platform architects assemble in Philadelphia to blueprint Republican policy, forces are at work in the party of Borah that would make the great non-interventionist stir in his grave.

The foreign policy plank that is finally shaped is likely to be a far cry from the mind-our-own-business aloofness vigorously voiced at the Cleveland convention.

Indications are it will carry less insulation than the moderate foreign affairs recommendations of the more recent Glenn Frank committee.

Shifts in public sentiment caused by the Nazi onrush into the heart of France, with its accompanying threat to this hemisphere's security, may force the concessions.

This change in party pulse has occurred since the Frank report was prepared and more noticeably since the convention delegates themselves were named.

IT IS THE SAME weighty influence that has altered the prospects of the candidates themselves and has pushed suddenly near the top a man who one month ago was a 100-to-1 shot.

The flashing late entry is Wendell L. Willkie, young utilities executive, who stands for all of the material aid this country can give the Allies short of sending troops. The President himself has declared for no more.

Pointing to the trend, Borah's able disciple of insulationism—Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan—called last week for a policy of "help-the-Allies nonbelligerency."

Vandenberg's declaration fell something short of Willkie's more sweeping call for Allied assistance. But it evinced keener recognition of America's stake in the European conflict than his party had hitherto shown.

That Vandenberg's was not a lone G. O. P. voice was shown by Senate Minority Leader McNary's swift interpretive indorsement.

No Republican candidate in the field now stands publicly opposed to American help for Britain and France—a principal the bulk of the party fought stubbornly when the Neutrality Act was amended.

* * * *

CANDIDATES DON'T WRITE the platform, nor do Republican Senators or House members.

But candidates themselves can wield a determining influence, and the nominee can control and remake the platform. Former Gov. Landon did as much in 1936 when he announced three personal amendments to the convention's money, labor and civil service planks.

Resolutions committeemen were elected before the present world plight became imminent. But they will keep ears to the ground and eyes on the party's next standard-bearer.

Foreign affairs is but one of a maze of issues to be shaved from the comprehensive Frank report and made to fit if possible on the back of a penny postcard. But due to the world crisis, it will receive more attention than all of the others.

It perhaps never will be brought foursquare with the Roosevelt-Hull foreign policy due to Republican isolationist precedents and strong inner-party opposition to a whole hog policy of Allied help.

But there are straws that point to an Allied aid plank hedged by warnings against giving help hurtful to national defense or leading ultimately to war. "Keep us out of war" will be emphasized in the platform and in the campaign.

* * * *

UNTIL MANAGERS for Dewey, Taft, Willkie, Vandenberg, ad infinitum, get down on the Philadelphia convention floor and slug it out with ballots, it still might be anybody's nomination.

A poll of Washington news hucksters in the last week would have registered an amazing jump in dope bets on Willkie, a horse that within a week has lost his ebony darkness. Willkie, the dope runs, has everything except delegates, largely corraled by others before he entered the race. But if the Dewey bandwagon smashes on the convention track and if Taft cracks on the same turn, the delegates will be looking for another bus.

The first run-off will almost certainly be between Dewey and Taft. Each claims the largest number, but neither has a majority.

If Dewey can roll his votes up to the magical 500 on the early ballots before a setback, then he will win and take all. The same applies to Taft. But if either starts to slide, even their hog-tied delegates will scamper for a winner.

Willkie backers are counting on Dewey shooting all he has on the early ballots and failing to make it, and on Taft duplicating this performance either before or after Dewey. Meanwhile the New York Hoosier hopes to be boosting his delegate nucleus steadily with each ballot. If he can show a large growth by the time the Taft and Dewey breaks come (if they come), Willkie reckons as how he might ride to victory.

Vandenberg forces may deliberately take a fourth-place position at the start, on the chance that neither Dewey, Taft nor Willkie will make it. Voting only those delegates he knows will stick, the Michigan Senator may bide his time until all of the other three have had their ride. The odds are heavy that the nomination will come before the three leaders get bumped off.

But if it doesn't, you will see a Vandenberg play.

* * * *

THE REPUBLICAN NOMINATION may have more than a casual effect on the Democratic ticket—it may influence who runs with Roosevelt if he runs.

If there is anything less certain than who will be the Republican Presidential nominee, it is who will be the Democratic vice presidential nominee.

And it is a safe bet that Mr. Roosevelt if he runs is going to look over the caliber of the Republican ticket before he decides finally on who he wants on his own.

More than half a dozen have been urged for the post, depending on who did the urging—Hull, Douglas, Byrnes, Garner, Bankhead, McNutt and Rayburn, among others.

But if the Republican convention nominates Dewey, still another Democrat may receive more than passing White House consideration for Democratic second place. He is Gov. Lloyd C. Stark, of Missouri, stanch third-term advocate, whose State administration smashed the Kansas City machine of iron-fisted Tom Pendergast.

Stark's friends argue that none in the Democratic fold could more effectively offset the racket-busting record of Dewey than Stark and his accomplishment in breaking down the Pendergast ring and placing its leader in jail. Incidentally, the idea wouldn't be displeasing at all to Gov. Stark, who is currently in a three-way race for the Senate and has some irons in the fire for the soon-to-be-vacated Secretary of the Navy post.

One important figure may stand in the way of all three ambitions—Senator Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri, who battled against a third term and against Stark for control of the Missouri delegation and won.

On the asset side, Stark can list friendship with the President, a successful business career, a good record as Governor, training at the Naval Academy, commissioned service in both Army and Navy, plus the fact that he hails from Missouri. In between jobs, Stark rests at home among his orchards (he runs a large nursery), rides thoroughbred horses, fishes and reads naval histories.

* * * *

WHILE A THIRD-TERM chorus drowns out all suggestions that the President might yet say "no," one other influential voice still hasn't said "yes."

Its silent possessor is Postmaster General James A. Farley. He directed the President's first and second campaigns, but hasn't asked a place in the "draft" drive. Friends count it significant he never has withdrawn statements that his name will be presented to the Democratic convention regardless of whose else is.

A Capitol anecdote may mean much or nothing.

Farley recently encountered on the Hill Senator Byrnes, of South Carolina, currently being boomed for second place with Roosevelt.

"How do you do, Mr. Vice President?" greeted Farley.

"And how do you do, Mr. President?" responded Byrnes.

Grinned Farley in rejoinder: "That's the most intelligent remark I ever heard at the Capitol."

Will the groundswell carry him to the Republican Presidential nomination?

Vocational Schools Aid in Defense

By Edward Ryan

Budget Bureau officials are reported to be cool to the notion of going all the way with Government educators who have proposed a mass expansion of vocational training schools in line with national defense.

Some expansion of these schools is thought to be in the making, but the program likely will be held far within the possible limits outlined by the Office of Education.

A central problem in deciding just how far the expansion will be carried, it was understood, is the question of the speed and duration of the preparedness program. If the program is fast and short-lived, the problem would be to get all the skilled men in the right places immediately without counting too much on training new workers. If the emergency lasted, importance of training new skilled workers would grow.

Whatever way the emergency and the training decision goes, education officials pointed out, the vocational schools are ready to get into the defense program with everything they have. And they have plenty, according to a survey directed by John W. Studebaker, commissioner of education.

Of 2,000,000 persons now enrolled in vocational schools throughout the country, about 700,000 are studying trade and industrial courses and about 500,000 are specializing in skills which could be used in the national defense program, the report said.

Their instructors total about 53,000, with around 15,000 on the defense skills, and the training goes on in schools which represent a $1,000,000,000 investment.

Studebaker estimated that if all these facilities were brought to full production, the 500,000 total of those receiving training in defense skills could be boosted to 1,250,000.

If the schools were kept open day and night during the summer, he said, 150,000 more students would be able to take intensive trade training courses. During the regular school year another 225,000 persons could be given 12-week training courses, 40 to 42 hours a week, by two extra school shifts, one in the late afternoon, one at night. A third program of extension training for employed workers could take care of 375,000 men, he said.

Studebaker estimated that the proposed program would cost $63,600,000. He recommended that Federal funds for the expansion be distributed to the States on the basis of obvious needs for industrial expansion rather than on a population basis. He also suggested that the normal requirement for States to match Federal funs be dropped.

Speed and economy in operating his proposed program, said Studebaker, could be obtained only if the funds were given to the Office of Education to be allotted to States and local communities "through regular channels of educational administration."

"In this way," he said, "responsibility will be definitely placed, years of experience in operating Federal-State relations with educational institutions utilized, and a responsible system of checking and reporting results maintained."

Besides the expanded training possible through full use of the present school plants, Studebaker said that more could be trained each year at a cost of $50,000,000 for each additional 250,000 students.

He estimated that 140 engineering schools could provide intensive training in defense skills for about 20,000 students a year at a cost of $14,000,000.

Scientists and Engineers Mobilize Talents for Defense

By John J. O'Neill

The defense of the United States involves an extensive task in scientific planning and engineering. This task is being approached with all the thoroughness that scientists and engineers can bring to their tasks. During the last week initial steps were taken to put into operation plans for organizing the scientists and the medical and engineering professions.

If the national defense program as a whole can be likened to a living thing then the three departments mentioned—science, medicine and engineering—may be likened to the brain of the organism. This brain does not comprise a very large number of individuals—only about 315,000. The medical group is the largest, with about 150,000 doctors; the engineering group next with 115,000 members in the principal societies, and the scientists have about 50,000. Although this combined group is relatively small, it is the foundation on which any preparedness structure must be built.

Within the learned professions and the engineering field the abilities and accomplishments of every individual are known and recorded and they and the members are organized through societies and institutes. The nature of their activities requires that they be in continual cooperation with each other. As a result the scientists, medical men and engineers can be organized rapidly for any defense program.

The scientific, medical and engineering groups are organized along completely democratic lines. The Government's defense program calls for utilization of their societies as the means through which the defense program may be organized most efficiently.

By mobilization of these groups, many of the mistakes that were made in the preparedness work for the last war may be avoided. In the earlier situation each individual decided for himself how he best could serve, and as a result something far below maximum efficiency was attained in the national program.

The medical profession, in the present situation, will be organized regardless of whether the individual physicians go into military service or remain civilians. While it is important to have doctors at the front, it is important also to have every section of the country adequately provided with medical service. Those called for military service will be selected because of their qualifications and experience. The American Medical Association will carry on its work through its component States societies, and these, in turn, through their county societies. The contact with the national Government will be through the Surgeon General of the Army. Lieut. Col. G. C. Dunham is building the liaison bridge between the civil and military authorities.

The A. M. A. has recognized that in order to achieve the highest efficiency in the defense program the medical societies and individuals must sacrifice some of their liberty and individual initiative, and has adopted a resolution calling for the return of full liberties after the emergency.

The scientists have maintained since the Civil War the organization which was established for aiding the Government in that emergency. It is the National Academy of Sciences. In the World War, the National Research Council was organized as a more extensive unit of the academy for handling scientific problems encountered by the Government. The council has continued to function as a peacetime preparedness unit. In the period of economic emergency known as the depression, another scientific unit, the President's advisory committee on science, was organized under the chairmanship of Dr. Karl T. Compton, president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. This has been merged with the academy and the council.

Although science covers a wide field, its subjects ranging from astronomy to zoology, each having its specialized societies, all can be organized through the National Research Council.

Some of the scientific societies have large memberships, such as the American Chemical Society, the American Physical Society and the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology, but most of them are relatively small. Dr. Albert Barrows is developing a plan of coordination for the societies through the National Research Council.

The first step in the mobilization of the engineering profession is the taking of a census of all engineers in their present status. Associated with the engineering societies in this project is the American Institute of Architects. The American Society of Civil Engineers, representing the group which would be called on first for rush construction work, is handling the census.

The engineering profession is being organized for the national defense program under the leadership of Gano Dunn, former chairman of the National Research Council and of the Engineering Foundation and former president of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers. He is president of Cooper Union and of the J. G. White Engineering Corporation. He has received many medals and honors from engineering and scientific societies. He handled nitrate and submarine cable problems in the World War.

Americas Begin to Curb 5th Column

Latin Countries, Alarmed by Nazi Successes, Rush Defense Measures

By John M. Vebber
United Press Latin-American Editor.

The speed of Adolf Hitler's blitzkreig had repercussions this week in Latin America where the governments, shaken out of their complacence, rushed measures to offset possible fifth columns.

It was generally recognized that internal treachery and sabotage might easily render ineffective the physical protection afforded by the Atlantic Ocean, and that inter-American solidarity was never more necessary to prevent totalitarianism from spreading to the Western Hemisphere.

A Navy Day speech by President Getulio Vargas of Brazil, because of the use of such phrases as "vigorous peoples," "dead and sterile ideas" and "fertile new era," was interpreted by some as a defense of European dictatorships. An official communique, however, denied that President Vargas was sympathetic with totalitarianism and declared that Brazilian foreign policy is based on inter-American solidarity for the defense of the New World against any attacks from outside.

The Mexican government moved to halt the dissemination of Nazi propaganda—which had assumed serious proportions in that country—by demanding that Germany recall the press attache of the Reich Legation in Mexico City, Arthur Dietrich.

Nazi Aide Discredited

Dietrich frequently has been charged with organization of fifth column elements in the southern republic and the announcement that he was no longer acceptable to Mexico followed a statement by Interior Secretary Ignacio Garcia Telez that Mexican foreign policy is pro-ally and one of cooperation with the United States.

In Argentina, the government urged quick enactment of an emergency powers bill to enable it to cope with possible subversive activities by "undemocratic elements." The measure, introduced a week ago, struck a snag on the floor of the Senate after being reported favorably because of press restrictions.

Frontier garrisons were reinforced, particularly in the far northeast bordering on Brazil, to prevent illegal entry to Argentina of undesirable aliens.

The government of Uruguay, smallest republic in South America with a German population estimated at 10,000, continued its investigation of Nazi-Fascist activities allegedly aimed at stirring up a revolution. An illicit organizations bill was passed by the Chamber of Deputies to authorize President Alfredo Baldomir to dissolve all foreign associations, but the German minister, anticipating the dissolution order, disbanded Nazi groups.

Uruguay Bolsters Defense

The Uruguayan army also strengthened border and coastal guards, both along the sea and the Plate and Uruguayan rivers.

Panamanian authorities cooperated with United States officials in the Panama Canal Zone in a checkup of all aliens living in the American strip as well as in the adjoining republic. The United States Army was reported to have undertaken an exhaustive investigation of credentials held by Europeans in the Canal Zone. The Panamanian government, it was understood, has agreed to deport any fifth column suspects deported from the Canal Zone.

Colombia tightened its safety measures to prevent any "Trojan horse" elements from gaining a foothold in the country and reiterated its policy to cooperate with other American Republics in defense of democratic principles.

The Bogota government also canceled the contracts of 80 Germans employed by the Scadta Air Line and replaced them with American and Colombian pilots, mechanics and radio operators on planes of the new national airlines of Colombia, which merged Scadta and Saco Air Lines. The move was hailed in American aviation circles which had agitated for a change on the grounds that the Germans represented a possible threat to the safety of the Panama Canal.

Gardenas Lauds Censure

Another reason for stricter control of foreigners was the entry of Italy in the war on the side of Germany.

President Lazaro Cardenas of Mexico led Latin America in condemning the war declaration by Premier Benito Mussolini when he cabled President Albert Lebrun of France that Rome's action "caused a painful impression" in Mexico.

Bolivian mobs stoned the Italian and German legations in La Paz, shattering windows and causing much damage.

In Montevideo, student groups paraded through downtown streets, singing the "Marseillaise" and shouting anti-Italian phrases. Windows in the Italian Club were broken, while disorders broke out in front of the Italian Legation where a heavy police guard prevented any damage.

The Italian Legation in San Jose, Costa Rica, also was the object of a wrathful street mob which hurled stones at the doors and windows.

Uneasy Lies the Head That Is Still Wearing A Crown As More European Thrones Topple

By Richard Oulahan 3d.

The flight last week of King Haakon of Norway with his family and the Norwegian government, to England, increased Europe's growing roster of royal emigres.

If the last World War was an episode of toppling thrones, the present conflict is even worse—from the point of view of royalty. In less than three months five monarchs have fled to exile before the Nazi steamroller, or remained behind as prisoners of war or puppets of the German high command. Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands; Grand Duchess Charlotte of Luxembourg, and now King Haakon of Norway have fled with their families to friendly soil. King Christian of Denmark remains in Copenhagen, a king without a voice in the ruling of his overrun country, and he has lost an independent crown—Iceland, the Faeroe Islands and Greenlad, as well. King Leopold of the Belgians divested by his own government of what power he might have had as an exile, is a prisoner of the Nazis in his own country. His children, Crown Prince Baudouin and his royal brother and sister, have found haven in Lisbon, Portugal—probably as safe a place as the continent of Europe can provide.

With the entrance of Italy into the war, the limelight shifts to other trembling crowned heads—in the Balkans, in North Africa and the Near East. Soon they, too, may be exiles, captives or puppets, their lands swallowed up by the advance of the Axis.

Egypt, Rumania, Yugoslavia Periled

Directly menaced are Egypt, Rumania and Yugoslavia. The next hour may find young King Farouk defending his country and the crown of Cleopatra from invading Italian territorials. Rumania, holder of Bessarabia, formerly a part of Russia, and Transylvania-Bucovina, once a part of Hungary, as well as the one-time Bulgarian province of Dobruja, the oil storehouse for the Reich, is menaced from all sides. The tenth year of his truobled reign just closed, King Carol clings tenaciously to Rumania's neutrality and to his throne.

Yugoslavia, wedged between Germany, Italy and Italian-held Albania, is another sore spot of the Balkans. Young King Peter may never rule this heterogenous land, (he will not be given full authority until he is 18), if the totalitarians decide to move in his direction. Meanwhile, Prince Peter, regent of Yugoslavia, is trying to hold in check the Croats and Slovenes in their autonomy moves, and to prepare his country for defense.

Greece and Bulgaria, both strategically located, and in the path of conflict should Turkey enter the war, are as jittery as the rest. Czar Boris of Bulgaria has been juggling cabinets as his little nation swayed from a pro-Axis viewpoint to a shocked silence, with Allied leanings, as a result of the brutalitarian move against the Lowlands. George of Greece, King of the Hellenes, only recently returned from exile, holds an Allied pledge to defend his country from invasion, but nonetheless the fture looks black for ancient Attica. Hungary, a kingdom without a king, is strongly pro-Axis, and may enter the war on the side of Germany and Italy. Regent Horthy, a peace-loving admiral in a sealess country, would like Hungary to remain neutral and settle her differences after the war, but rioters in Budapest clamor to join the fellow have-nots in the European holocaust.

King Gustaf Waits—and Fears

In Sweden, 81-year-old King Gustaf sits tight on his throne, and no doubt breaths more easily as the theater of war shifts from Scandinavia. But the old monarch must realize that Swedish ore and coal caused the downfall of his fellow kings. Haakon of Norway and Christian of Denmark, and that it may yet be Sweden's—and his own—undoing.

The war has penetrated even to those seldom heard of Lilliputlands of Europe. Indeed, fighting began over a minute territory—the Free State of Danzig. Tiny Luxembourg was swallowed up in less than a day. Monaco, the miniscule principality on the Riviera, near Nice, is a belligerent; Prince Louis of Monaco sent his own regiment to join the Allies. Monaco is in the combat zone, and may soon be a battleground of French and Italian, to say nothing of Monacan troops. Liechtenstein, nestled in the Alps between Austria and Switzerland, is surrounded by war, as is her big brother, Switzerland. Liechtenstein might become the road to a blitzkreig against the Swiss, and Prince Franz Josef would lose his crown too.

New developments in the war throw the limelight on several exiled kings and would-be kings who have remained in the shadows for many months. Victory for either side might result in restoration for these pretenders, if they declare which side they are on. Consequently we find, siding with the Allied cause, former King Zog of Albania, erstwhile Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia, and Archduke Otto, claimant of the ancient throne of the Hapsburgs. Zog has offered his services to Turkey, should that country enter the war. Reports from Ethiopia state that Haile Selassie has armed 200,000 natives, and that they have revolted against their Italian rulers. Otto Hapsburg, long a favorite of the British and French, has demonstrated his support of their cause. An army of Austrian refugees is fighting with the Allies, under the leadership of Prince von Starhemburg, and Otto's plan for a post-war Danubia might be adopted if the democracies triumph. Should the Allies win out, these kings might easily be restored. An Axis victory, however, would quash their chances forever, perhaps.

Ex-Kaiser's Kin Fight for Nazis

Favoring the Fascists, and possibly profiting by a victory on the side of Germany and Italy, are the Hohenzollerns, the Spanish Bourbons and the Spanish Carlists. Former Kaiser Wilhelm is now under the protection of the German army in his haven in Doorn, while his sons and grandsons fight with the Nazis. The Hohenzollerns have bled for the Nazi cause—Prince Oscar and Prince Wilhelm both died in battle—and should Berlin emerge victor the former German royal family might have some, if not all, of their privileges restored. Former Kaiser Wilhelm and his son, the former Crown Prince, have both renounced their claims on the non-existent German throne, but Prince Louis Ferdinand is an aspiring seeker of the old crown, and is very popular in Germany.

Though Spain is not at war, she is a non-belligerent ally of Italy, and the claimants of the Spanish crown tactfully live in Italy and share the views of the Franco government. Alfonso, the former king, is not a likely candidate for reenthronement, but his younger son, Prince Juan, free of hemophilia, the curse of the royal family, has many adherents in Spain, and is the present Bourbon candidate.

The Carlists, followers of a branch of the Spanish royal family, have a candidate in the Italian Prince Xavier of Bourbon-Parma. Their cause, stemming back to a nineteenth-century revolution that cleaved the reigning family of Spain into two parts, is a weak one, though there are many Carlists in Navarre and Aragon. Xavier is a poor second to Juan, but he is conceded an outside chance. Both royalist groups actively supported the Franco revolution, and both share the tacit approval of the Spanish dictator.

The Duke of Guise and his son, the Count of Paris, claimants of the long abandoned throne of democratic France, were driven from their refuge in Belgium by the blitzkreig, and, forbidden to set foot on French soil, fled to Morocco. Their chances of success are remote, to say the least. There are perhaps 50,000 royalists in France. Nonetheless, the Duke and his son hope for an Allied victory and a revival of the old order.

Prince Napoleon, young son of Princess Clementine of Belgium, a cousin of King Leopold, is the white hope of the few remaining Bonapartists in France today, but his chances are even less than his rivals, the Orleanists. Grand Duke Vladimir, hope of the White Russians, and Dom Duarte, pretender to the vacant throne of Portugal, could hardly expect anything less than a miracle, a modern Treaty of Vienna and a period of kingmaking on the Continent, to reinstate them on the thrones of their fathers.

Two monarchs stand out on the European scene today, at opposite ends of the war, the rallying point of all royalist hope. These are, of course, King George of Britain and the Italian ruler, Victor Emmanuel. Should the Axis win, King George would probably fall, as did the rulers of defeated Austria-Hungary, Germany, Bulgaria and Turkey and ruined Russia in the last war. If the Allies emerge victorious, King Victor Emmanuel would seem destined to exile. Whichever way the wind blows it will blow ill for some crowned heads, and, it seems, the face of a continent will look strangely different after the battle is over.

Steamrollered by the Nazi war machine are the kingdoms of Leopold, of Belgium (above), and Haakon, of Norway (right). Leopold still is in his native land, but Haakon was forced to flee to England.

Queen Wilhelmina, of the Netherlands (above), had to quit her nation when Adolf Hitler's legions swept through the Low Countries. She now has found refuge in Britain.

At war today are the empires of King Victor Emmanuel, of Italy (left), and King George VI, of Great Britain

Uneasy lies the crown on the heads of Greece's King George (right), Sweden's King Gustaf (below) and Rumania's King Carol. Sweden has seen its Scandinavian neighbors fall under the Nazi heel

Greece, situated in the turbulent Mediterranean area, might be the target of an Italian thrust into the Balkans. Rumania has Bessarabia, which Soviet Russia covets.

Canadian Police Curb Espionage in Dominion

Lack of Sabotage Since War Began Due to Efficiency of Royal Mounted, Officials Say

By By D. M. Halliday

Toronto, June 15.—While dominion ministers regard as 'plain hysteria" the fears of Premier Mitchell Hepburn of Ontario, that Nazi and Fascist sympathizers in the United States are preparing to invade Canada, they are certainly not discounting possibilities.

"Military and police provisions at the present time are wholly adequate to deal with any such situation," said C. G. Power, air minister and acting defense minister. "Such reckless and impetuous action by Mr. Hepburn materially interferes with the vital and necessary work being carried on by national defense officers in their task of recruiting and training men for our overseas forces, as well as providing adequate protection for our own country."

Ernest Lapointe, minister of justice, who controls the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and other criminal investigation bodies, advised that if secret service operatives of Premier Hepburn's provincial police had information on plans of German and Italian bands to attack, "they should communicate with the R. C. M. P. and not make splashes in the newspapers."

The mounted police, he added, know, "as far as it is possible to know, what is going on, and they are taking all necessary steps to meet whatever situation may arise. They have, for some time, been in direct communication with the secret service and police authorities of the United States," he said.

Premier Hepburn continues to strengthen his Ontario police force against enemies within and without, and it is now the largest and strongest force in the province's history. Supporting its activities are vlounteer civil guards who soon will number 25,000. The province guarantees assistance to any municipality desirous of setting up a civil guard. Efforts are being made to have Ottawa provide sidearms, machine guns and mobile equipment so that the guards may be used as flying columns. In Welland, 550 World War veterans have been armed and hold weekly drills, with detachments assigned to guard key points along the Welland Canal at the first outbreak of trouble. Precautions taken at Windsor include the mobilization for guard duty of one company of the Essex Scottish (tank) Regiment and the establishment of a home guard. These moves and similar local efforts are quite apart from 'hush-hush" action taken by federal authorities.

Enemies within Canada's gates, now including Italian aliens, are said to be well-rounded up, but in appreciation of the danger of fifth columnists still at large, a committee of 15 embers of the House of Commons is being set up and probably will be headed by Arthur Slaght, leading criminal lawyer, who is demanding that Parliament decree death for spies and saboteurs.

"Parliament should give solemn warning to enemy aliens everywhere," he said, "that espionage and sabotage will be dealt with drastically in Canada. Let's put the fear of God into them, insofar as it is possible to put the fear of God into cowardly, treacherous, criminal saboteurs.

"If any evil-minded enemy aliens contemplate trips to Canada, let me warn them that we in this country shall use best efforts to see that their adventure ends at the end of a rope."

In the World War, sabotage in Canada started five months after the outbreak. After nine months of the present war, there had not been a serious instance of sabotage, Slaght said. "That is not just good luck," he added. "It is due to the work of the R. C. M. P. and the local police throughout Canada, who have been at work for years on this problem."

Records of Early U. S. History At Watertown

Watertown, N. Y.

Authentic documents bearing the signatures of three Presidents of the United States are contained in the collection housed in the Historical Building at Watertown. Original settlers and landowners in Jefferson County whose properties were created almost with the birth of the Nation have handed these manuscripts down from generation to generation. George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and Martin Van Buren are the three Presidents whose signatures are affixed to deeds and commissions on display here.

Philippine Voters to Pass On Constitutional Changes

2,500,000 to Decide on Bicameral Legislature, Election Commission, And Salary Boosts on Tuesday

Special Correspondence.

Manila, June 15.—The 2,500,000 voters of the Philippines will be asked to pass on four proposed amendments to the constitution of the commonwealth at a plebiscite on Tuesday. The amendments, the first proposed since the acceptance of the constitution by the Filipino people in 1935, follow:

1. Reduction of the tenure of the president and vice president from six years, with no possgile reelection, to four yeras, with one reelection.

2. Establishment of a bicameral legislature through revival of the Senate, to be composed of 24 members elected at large.

3. Fixing the salary of members of the bicameral legislature at 7,200 pesos ($3,600) a year. (This raises the present salary of members of the national assembly, who get 5,000 pesos a year.)

4. Establishment of a commission on elections which shall take charge of the conduct of all elections.

The proposed amendments were approved by the national assembly by almost unanimous vote. In the same measure the assembly also called for a national plebiscite to pass on the amendments.

The national campaign waged by the majority party for the acceptance of the amendments was slow in getting started, but last month it gained both in momentum and bitterness as opposition to the amendments developed from unexpected quarters.

Popular Front Took Up the Chalelnge

The Popular Front, composed of various elements that compose the chief opposition to the government, was the first to take up the challenge and campaign actively in the provinces against acceptance of the amendments. Its cry of "Vote 'No' on the Amendments" was quickly taken up by young Philippines, a party composed of young men and women, most of them engaged in the professions who do not see eye to eye with President Manuel Quezon and his followers on many governmental policies.

At first inclined to take things for granted, leaders in the government, headed by President Quezon and Speaker Jose Yulo, soon became aware that the opposition was making inroads in many provinces. A campaign plan was hurriedly drafted and stumping tours planned. Quezon himself has made several trips into the provinces to urge acceptance of the amendments, while Yulo and parties of assemblymen have tourned the entire length and breadth of the ilands.

President Quezon has pleaded for approval of two of the amendments, but has always declared he is not interested in the one shortening his term of office and permitting his reelection. "I do not care how you vote on this amendment," he has said. "I am not interested, because I am not a candidate for any office."

However, he has emphasized the importance of the amendment recreating a bicameral legislature, and told the people that the future of the democratic system of government in the Philippines rests on this amendment.

Quezon Warns of Dictatorship, Revolution

Addressing some 2,000 school teachers, supervisors and superintendents in convention in Baguio recently, Quezon told them that unless the Senate should be revived and a bicameral legislature restored, the Philippines would see one of three things happen in 15 years—a dictatorship, an oligarchy or a revolution. He expounded on the immense powers granted the national assembly by the constitution and the danger of a conflict between the assembly and the president. If a conflict occurred, he said, two things would come to pass: in the event of victory by the president there would be a dictatorship; in case of a victory for the assembly an oligarchy would follow.

Two weeks before the plebiscite the amendment for the reelection of the president seems certain of approval, as is the one creating an electoral commission. Greatest opposition has developed in the provinces to the amendments recreating the senate and increasing the salary of members of the legislature. The revival of the senate and increase in legislative salaries would mean a considerable increase in appropriations, which, according to the poorer agricultural workers, the country can ill afford now.

Already the opposition is sounding warnings of fraud. It feels certain that at least two of the amendments would be defeated in an honest plebiscite, but will be pronounced approved in the final count through stuffing the ballot boxes.

Meanwhile government agencies throughout the islands report good progress in the campaign for acceptance of the amendments, and members of Mr. Quezon's cabinet, who have been placed in charge of the drive in different sections of the country, predict approval of all four amendments on June 16.

Tomato Wine—a New Discovery

East Winsor, Vt.—Dr. H. C. Gillete of this city has discovered a process whereby excellent wine can be made from tomatoes. The wine has a good appearance and a fine flavor. Besides, it is made without the use of any alcoholic preparation. "If the tomato be as highly medicinal as recommended, it may be anticipated that the wine will find favor with the public."

When Will Congress Adjourn?

Whether suffering from sincere nostalgia or from the necessity to repair political fences, possibly either or both, many members of Congress are making an effort to have that august body adjourn sine die before the middle of July.

Representative Petrikin (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, asked for a suspension of rules to consider his joint resolution to the effect that "Congress will terminate its present session, by adjournment sine die on the 9th of July next."

His brother Democrats opposed such a resolution and in support of their objection made this statement: "Friends of the Administration are anxious to terminate the present session at the earliest day possible, consistent with the interest of the country, and with due regard for the business that must be passed upon before adjournment. They are, however, opposed to fixing a day until they can see some prospect ahead of finishing the business or of getting it in such a state of preparation as would justify them in fixing a day for adjournment. They believe that all those who are really desirous to terminate the session at an early day would and ought to come forward with an anxious desire to act uon the measures that must be passed upon, instead of consuming the time with debate."

Seaman Miraculously Rescued

New York City.—The master of the British steamship "Great Western" upon his arrival here said that while in mid-ocean a seaman, shifting a jib, fell overboard. The alarm was given, the boats manned and lowered, and ships engines stopped. Notwithstanding the fact that the ship passed over the seaman, he was picked up uninjured a half-mile astern of the "Great Western."

'Prisoners of State'

During the debate on the general appropriate bill Representative Cushing, of Massachusetts, tried in vain to have an item inserted calling for the appropriation of $5,000 "to be applied to a more commodious safe-keeping of two prisoners of State held in prisons in the State of New York for an alleged violation of the Neutrality Act."

The two prisoners concerned are William Lyon Mackenzie and Stephen Van Rensselaer, who were arrested and convicted on charges of enlisting men for military service against Great Britain in the recent Canadian rebellion. Because of their prominence Mr. Cushing felt that they should receive special consideration during the time of their incarceration especially since they are regarded as "prisoners of state."

Czar's Order Puzzles Italy

St. Petersburg, Russia—The Czar has issued an order to the Russian Ambassador accredited to Rome "to place under a peculiar system of control all Russian artists studying in the Italian capital." What this "peculiar system of control" actually is remains a mystery to Rome government.

Britisher Invents New Gun

London, Eng.—A. M. Perkins, an inventor, has offered to the government his so-called "steam-gun" which will discharge cannon balls at the rate of 60 per minute. One pound of anthracite coal will generate sufficient steam to discharge four pounds of balls. When steam is raised to 225 pounds in the steam-generator cannon balls fired from the new gun against an iron target at 100 feet will be completely flattened; at 400 pounds a pressure on the cannon at the same target the balls will be shattered to atoms.

Russian Invasion Halted

St. Petersburg, Russia—Information received from the Russian army commanders in the Caucasion Area gives a discouraging picture of the army's drive toward the Black Sea. The Circassians are resisting the invading army of the Czar. Nine Russian forts have fallen to the enemy and the remaining two were only saved by the prompt arrival of two Russian ships-of-the-line. The Circassians gave the Russian army no quarter. In the fort of St. Nicholas 1,000 men were "put to the sword."

International Kaleidoscope: Correspondence From Foreign Capitals

Italian Action Aids Allied Blockade of Most of Europe's Ports

By Jawes M. Minifie
From the Herald Tribune Bureau
Copyright, 1940, New York Tribune, Inc.

London, June 15.—With the entry of Italy into the war, the continent of Europe, with the exception of western and southern France and the Iberian peninsula, falls, for all practical purposes, into a unified blockade system.

There are certain countries which, in theory, lie outside it. Sweden, on paper at least, is still free to trade with the outside world, but since she is virtually surrounded by countries under German control, her economy must adapt itself to German requirements. The coal, without which her industries cannot work, cannot be brought in from England; there is not much doubt that German supplies will be made dependent on Sweden's good behavior.

Switzerland now is surrounded by belligerents, and her last non-belligerent port of entry, Genoa, has gone. For the time being, extra-European trade with Switzerland is impossible, for French railways and ports are too busy coping with war needs, while traffic from Italian ports through the Suez Canal or by way of Gibraltar has ceased.

The Balkans are in virtually the same position for the present. Until the naval situation in the Mediterranean clears up the only sea traffic left to these countries, with the exception of minor coastal sailings, will be within the Black Sea.

The British Navy has taken over control of trade in the Mediterranean through its use of contraband control bases. It is stated in informed quarters here that it may be possible for some form of trading between non-belligerent countries in the Mediterranean area to be resumed later, but even then all shipping will be subject to search by Allied naval units.

The economic consequences of the entry of Italy into the war are not expected to affect the Allies seriously, but they are expected to be very grave for Italy. In addition, economic experts say that Italy's entry has stopped a "pernicious leak" in the blockade of Germany.

Italy's oil position is one of her weakest points. She produces a small quantity of low-quality crude in Albania, but more than 90 per cent of her requirements have to be imported. More than 89 per cent of her imports come from countries outside the Mediterranean area.

Rumania supplied Italy with 19 per cent of her needs, but, presumably, this would now have to be shipped overland. This requires tankcars, of which there is believed to be a sortage. Germany is believed to need everything that can be used to hold oil, to supply her own wants.

Italy's annual coal imports amount to 12,000,000 tons, of which, in the last 12 months 3,000,000 tons were imported from England. Four months ago Germany promised to supply to Italy overland all the coal she needed. While some measure of success has attended this effort, it is believed to place a great strain on the German railway system. In addition, the Frankfort-Basel line, over which 40 per cent is moved, is considered very vulnerable to military action.

Italy is believed to be particularly vulnerable in respect to iron and steel. The Elba iron deposits supply less than one-fifth of Italy's requirements. In normal times, most of the ore needed is imported from Morocco and Spain, while the scrap comes largely from America. Of such vital war supplies as rubber, nickel, tin and chrome, Italy produces nothing and only a negligible quantity of cotton and copper.

During the last nine months every cent of available foreign exchange have been spent to stock up on these commodities. The Bank of Italy's report at the end of March showed only $30,000,000 in foreign exchange available.

So far as food is concerned, Italy will be pinched, but probably not beyond endurance. In normal years about 94 per cent of wheat needed was produced in Italy. The present wheat crop looks promising.

The chief raw product exported by Italy was mercury, of which the only other important producing center is Spain.

Despite the vigilance of the contraband control, it was known that large quantities of food and other raw materials, as well as finished products needed in war, found their way through Italy to Germany. The British are satisfied that instead of being a feeder for Germany, Italy will now be a drain on the resources of the Reich.

War Review

the Allied fleet was "roaming the Mediterranean, trying to lure the Italian fleet into battle." But the Italian warships, said a British spokesman, would not come into the open to accept the challenge.

The big German aim since the war started has been to "whittle the British navy down to our size." That job now has been given to Mussolini. In carrying it out, he probably will depend primarily on his submarines and aircraft, both of which outnumber Allied strength in those categories in the Mediterranean.

Yesterday the British admiralty admitted that an Italian submarine had sunk H. M. S. Calypso, an anti-aircraft cruiser. It was the second important British naval loss made public in two days, the torpedoing of the armed merchant cruiser Scotstoun by a German U-boat having been announced on Friday.

Here in Washington naval experts said that if the French fleet should be surrendered, the Nazi-Fascists would then have a fleet superior to the British navy in battleships and in categories other than aircraft carriers and cruisers.

AIR

There was something almost fantastic about Italy's entry into the war. First there was the long-drawn-out prelude, the loud talk, the demonstrations, and the classic ultimatum itself. To a world which had become accustomed to undeclared wars, it was all very strange.

And so was the aftermath of the ultimatum. A lightning stroke was expected, a la Hitler. None came. The Italians bombed Malta and a few other places, but it was all on a small scale.

Nevertheless, no military expert was minimizing the Italian air threat. Whatever may be the shortcomings of Mussolini's war machine as a whole, the Italian planes and Italian fliers are highly regarded.

It may very well be that the Mediterranean will be the theater for the showdown on that long-burning controversy over the plane versus the battleship.

The addition of Mussolini's war planes to those of Hitler further diminished Allied hopes of gaining parity or superiority in the air.

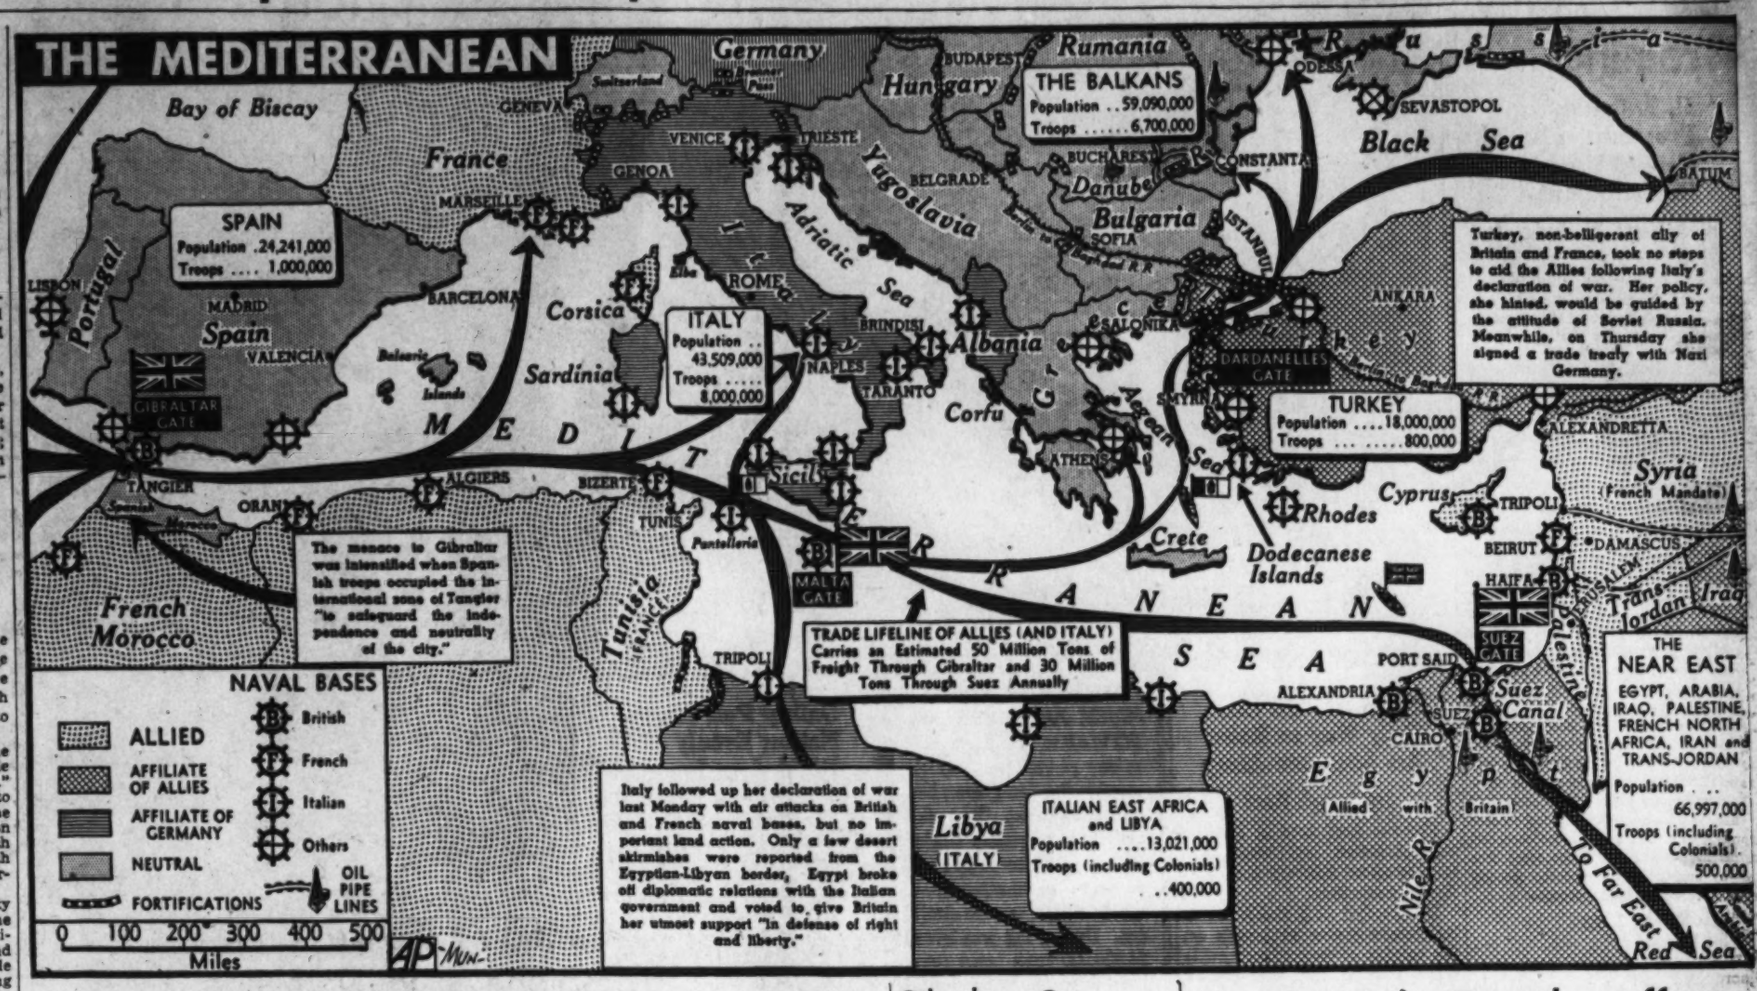
The Anglo-French purchasing commission disclosed in New York the other day that it had placed orders for 8,000 planes in the United States.

The commission said that "slightly in excess of 2,000" have already been delivered. Apparently that covers the many months since the embargo was lifted by the Neutrality Act. Germany is reported to be turning out 3,000 planes a month.

OTHER FRONTS

Russia, alarmed at Germany's lightning conquests, yesterday practically took over all of Lithuania, and charging that Lithuanians had "kidnaped" Russian military men to get their secrets, Moscow sent troops marching into the country.

Estonia and Finland may get similar treatment. Russia originally demanded military, naval and air bases in the Baltic countries because she was afraid of Germany. By this time her fear must have grown into downright terror.



Vital Suez Canal Occupies the Limelight As Italy Seeks Mediterranean Domination

Private Company Owns Strategic Water Route

By Richard L. Coe.

Geographically a part of Egypt, conceived in the public mind as a portion of the British Empire, and, because of its control, quite as frequently assumed to be French, the Suez Canal is none of these things. A private company owns and controls this ditch through a desert on a 99-year lease from the Egyptian government—a rental which will expire on November 17, 1968.

Paradoxically, however, the canal is all of these things. La Compagnie Universelle du Canal Maritime de Suez, which holds the canal, is French in that of the 32 members of the board, 18 members and the president are French, 10 members are British, 2 Egyptian and 1 Dutch. Since the Anglo-Egyptian treaty of 1936, Great Britain has kept 10,000 troops and 400 aviators in the canal zone as guardians of the peace until Egypt, in whose sphere the canal properly belongs, shall feel strong enough to police its own property. And the zone itself was Egyptian even before Seti I began a canal from the Red Sea to the Nile in the fourteenth century B. C.

It is into this maze of international veins that Italy has now finally struck its dagger.

Before one embarks on the international implications of the canal, the completely private aspect of the company should be understood. The board is utterly free from any government control. Although the land through which it passes is the property of the Egyptian government, it was leased, contructed and is run purely as a private business investment. And like any business concern, the board has tried to evolve its own version of the slogan, "The customer is always right."

In normal times—times which are hollowly referred to as "peace"—anyone with the price of a ticket is welcome, no questions asked. And like any other admission fee, the price of this ticket or toll is difficult to fix. Should it be too high, ships naturally would revert to the not impossible jaunt around the Cape. Should the rate be too low, the heavy expense would not justify the stockholders their dividends. Now the charge is $1.40 a passenger, military or civilian, $1.40 a ton for loaded vessels and 70 cents per ton for vessels in ballast.

Best Customers Are Troops

In 1938 479,802 passengers went through the canal, of whom 155,111 were military. Some 47,000 of these armed forces were British, 14,000 French and 91,000 Italian. And while the freight carried is to a large extent British, since the Ethiopian conquest the Italian proportion is showing a good second. Incidentally, only 1.1 per cent of Suez tonnage is under the Stars and Stripes!

These rates and its lack of representation on the board of directors are the reasons for Italy's hatred of star-customer Britain.

For since 1935 and the Ethiopian onslaught, Italy has had heavy freight charges to bear through this path to her new backdoor. Her tonnage equals the combined tonnage of the Netherlands, Germany and France. Small wonder Italy looks askance at a board which includes 19 Frenchmen and a Hollander. These new empire builders are not so wealthy as the established British and as an economic necessity Italy seeks bargain rates and reductions on its canal tickets.

Proud Britain, though, has never asked for this I-Can-Get-It-For-You-Wholesale bargaining. Ever since Victoria's golden days, Britain has sent hundreds of thousands of soldiers and shipping tonnage to its Eastern colonies, said never a word about special rates.

Egypt Put In Dilemma

In his declaration of war last Monday, Mussolini vowed that he was not at war with Egypt—among other countries of the Mediterranean basin. But he has carefully followed this by threats against Egypt for permitting British planes to use the land of the Pharoahs as air bases. And on Wednesday, Egypt broke off diplomatic relations with Italy.

Long before Ferdinand de Lesseps achieved his fabulous dream, Egypt had had a waterway between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea. From an inscription at Karnak it seems that the Wadi Tumilat, extending east of the Nile Valley almost to the head of the Persian Gulf, through the Bitter Lakes, existed in the time of Seti I in the fourteenth century B. C. While this was not, of course, the canal as we know it now, it did link the two seas, thanks to the life-giving Nile. Today it is occassionally part of the freshwater canal (the second of the Compagnie Universelle's duties, that of bringing and selling fresh water to the four canal cities, Port Said, Ismailia, Suez and Port Tewfik).

Herodotus told of the efforts of the Pharaoh Nekho to extend a canal from Lake Timsah, present site of Ismailia, southward. One hundred and twenty thousand men perished in the task before Nekho abandoned the idea after an oracle told him that the barbarians, meaning the Persians, alone would profit by the canal.

Harun at Rashid Abandoned Idea

The oracle was right, for it was a Persian, Darius himself, who continued the task and completed it a century later. That conqueror was so pleased with his canal that its site along the present-day freshwater canal has yielded several monuments erected to the glory of his achievement.

Through the centuries came more attempts and other canals always with the help of the Nile. Gradually the Pelusiac branch of the Nile dwindled. The Ptolemy rulers, the Romans, the Moslems and the Venetians, all had their ambitious schemes and partial successes.

The earliest-known idea of a canal across the Isthmus of

Egypt Will Take Possession in November, 1968

Suez, however, dates from the eighth century A. D., when, for a strangely twentieth century reason, Harun al-Rashid abandoned the scheme. He feared that it would be dangerous to lay open the coast of Arabia to a foreign navy—this time that of Byzantium. When the Venetians were desirous of a route to India at the close of the fifteenth century, the Turks intervened with their plans.

In 1771, Leibnitz recommended the idea to Louis XIV of France. Napoleon Bonoparte, the indefatigable, actually got around to having the site surveyed by Lepere, his chief road engineer. Proper Enfantin, the Saint Simonist, a portion of whose plans for the regeneration of the world included canals at Suez and Panama, had a role in the plan for a canal from Suez to Cairo and thence to Alexandria on the Mediterranean.

But it was not until a dreamer had appeared in the person of Ferdinand de Lesseps that the ditch as we know it was begun. He had come to Alexandria in 1832 as French consul and his ambition had been touched off by Lepere's Memoire regarding the scheme connecting the two seas. His opportunity came in 1854, when, on the death of Abbas Pasha, his friend, Said Pasha, became viceroy of Egypt. From him he obtained an exclusive and personal concession to dig a canal and to enjoy the exploitation of it for 99 years after its completion. No one else was to be permitted to construct a canal on Egyptian soil during that period.

To finance his project, de Lesseps sold stock to his fellow countrymen. With Napoleon III and his Empress Eugenie on board the Aigle at the head of 68 ships, the canal was inaugurated November 17, 1869. This then was the opening of the canal as we know it.

For the first few years the canal lost money badly and the Khedive Ismael, possessor of three-eighths of the public shares, began to worry about his investment. He spent much of his time on the European continent enjoying the fruits of his fortune none too wisely. Something, figured the Khedive, would have to bring in some more income.

Disraeli Got Rothschild Loan

Somehow Frederick Greenwood, editor of London's Pall Mall Gazette, heard rumors of these regal financial misfortunes and that he was about to pledge his 176,602 shares to a group of money-lenders. Within the hour Frederick Greenwood had transmitted the news to shrewd Prime Minister Disraeli. The story of "Dizzy's" loan from the Rothschild bank and the purchase by her majesty's government of the shares for $20,000,000 has been told often and dramatically. Thus England entered this privately owned company, without a controlling interest, but still her own best customer on her road to Eastern empire.

Until this week, the canal has been closed but three times since its opening. The first was for three days in 1882 when civil war threatened the Khedive. The second was in 1898 when a clause in the Constantinople agreement which declared that the canal "shall never be used for the exercise of the right of blockade" was invoked to keep a Spanish fleet from refueling. British troops closed the ditch in 1915 when a Turkish army threatened to invade Egypt from Damascus. In the present instance, the canal is not officially closed; the British simply are attempting to guard its entrance and thereby cut Italy off from its Abyssinian colony and keep its "lifeline" open.

That the canal has never had a hitch in its service of moving a ship from one sea to another is a tremendous tribute to the efficacy of its management. The slightest slip of any of its 112 pilots in teasing an unfamiliar vessel through any one of its 13 tortuous curves could possibly snarl up traffic for weeks on end. One of the large battleships or a luxury cruise liner might easily strike a sandbar. A fifth columnist might conceivably have entered the company's employ and placed an innocent-looking bomb on just the right spot. Almost any number of things might happen which would render the canal temporarily or permanently useless, but in all the 71 years nothing has.

Canal Becomes Egypt's Then

It is partly this remarkable record which is likely to govern what will happen to the canal when the 99-year lease expires. The constitution of the Compagnie Universelle states that the company will pass out of existence and that the canal will become the property of King Farouk or his successors on that November day. What will happen then?

One of three options must be carried out: Egypt may seek to run the canal itself, compensating the company for its equipment.

The government may lease to a new tenant, contracting for a lump-sum down payment and an annual rental. Italy, Germany and Japan are the logical contenders for this tenancy.

Egypt may renew its contractural agreement with the Compagnie Universelle. In this event, it would probably seek a greater percentage of the profits and heavier representation of the board of directors.

So the Suez situation stands, complex in its international implications, yet relying to an enormous degree on the aims and views of the parties in power in the home governments of countries far removed from the sandy ditch.

Gibralter Can Withstand Long Siege, British Say

By the Associated Press

British army engineers, who finished what nature started in making a fortress of Gibraltar, say the defense works that have made the rock invulnerable since 1704 have been modernized to be just as far from attack by air.

The specially trained defenders of "Old Gib" believe they can hold out indefinitely against siege, and at the same time beat off any enemy attempt to force passage through the mighty Atlantic gateway to the Mediterranean.

The great, gray limestone rock rises 1,400 feet above the water and points like a gnarled finger a mile wide and 3 miles long pointing toward Africa. Its seaward faces cannot be scaled, defenders say, and the narrow, low sandy link with Spain could be covered with an impassable fire from hidden batteries.

The mighty fort could be shelled either from Spain or Spanish Morocco, but the giant guns of Gibraltar, manned by crews behind protecting walls of steel and solid stone, could fire back to equal range. Defense against air attack is based almost entirely on the use of antiaircraft batteries. That is because land or water air bases for counterattack are vulnerable both to bombing or shelling from a distance.

The fort is provisioned to withstand months of siege, and rainfall catchment traps have stored up millions of gallons of water. Newly completed is the system of air raid shelters bored into the limestone. Some, protected overhead by 125 feet of solid rock—will hold 1,200 persons.

A maze of passages through the stone link supply and ammunition stores with troop quarters and firing positions. An army within the rock can fire camouflaged guns through a honeycomb of ports in any direction.

Once before Gibraltar was put to the test. In 1779, the Spanish began "the great siege" which lasted three years and seven months. Seven thousand British with 100 cannon held the rock against a combined Spanish and French force of 60 warships and 40,000 troops.

Argentina's Cantilo Affirms American Solidarity Based On '38 Declaration of Lima

By Herbert M. Clark

Buenos Aires, June 15.—South America will stand united against any aggression, whether by force of arms from within or without continental boundaries or by a "campaign of nerves" similar to that which Europe fought so long, Argentina's foreign minister, Jose M. Cantilo, told this correspondent today in an exclusive interview.

Foreign office circles have emphasized that Argentina, faithful to her inter-American obligations, will continue to follow a policy, including defense and solidarity, based on the accords reached at the Lima Conference two years ago. This policy, it was added, was only strengthened by the Italian entry into the war and by the recent speech of President Getulio Vargas of Brazil. It is noteworthy that neither the Italian move nor the Vargas speech were approved by the Argentine public, while, on the contrary, President Roosevelt's speech on Monday received the highest praise from all quarters.

Coincident with the fact that Vargas' speech was widely interpreted as indicative of a withdrawal from the principles of continental solidarity sounded at Lima, a member of the Argentine foreign office said:

"We do not know Brazil's plans and cannot comment on them. They are Brazil's problems. We can only reiterate that our own policy is unchanged."

In his interview Dr. Cantilo stated that the nations of South America are becoming ever more closely allied, and that mutual understanding between Argentina and the United States was improving daily, relations being marked with good will on both sides. He asserted that the nations of the southern continent were cooperating at present in the campaign against fifth columns, but rejected as "hypothetical" a question as to what course Argentina would pursue in the event that the United States entered the war.

Seated in the rich grand salon of the former private palace which now serves as Argentina's foreign ministry, Dr. Cantilo was asked whether there was any visible trend toward definite committments on a defensive alliance between the various nations of South America. He nodded his massive gray head vigorously as he pointed out that the initiative toward such action had been taken at the Lima Conference in December, 1938.

"Then," he said, "America expressed its continental solidarity in a form which carried an ample agreement and a unanimous will to maintain the existing international order in each and all of our countries."

"In that sense, I consider the Lima declaration the best continental agreement, and I am confident that it will be effective and efficient for the American future."

In the declaration of Lima, the Pan-American republics "reaffirmed" their continental solidarity and their purpose to collaborate in the maintenance of the principles on which this solidarity was based. They also expressed their determination to defend their independence against all foreign intervention or activity, asserting that when the peace, security or territorial integrity of any of the republics was threatened it became a common concern. The agreement provided machinery for mutual consulation in case of any threats.

Dr. Cantilo rejected any question as to the possible operation of a continental alliance as "hypothetical and indiscreet."

Turning to economic matters, the minister said that Argentina was working hard to foster inter-American trade. He inferred that he and his country would like a trade treaty with the United States, and added that the relations between Argentina and the United States were increasingly good.

"Argentina has adopted a policy directly aimed at stimulating inter-American trade," he said, "it is a policy of treaties and has been translated into actuality under the present government in accords signed with Brazil, Bolivia and Paraguay. A treaty is under discussion with Cuba; others were concluded in past administrations.

"It is to be regretted," he went on, "that the treaty in negotiation with the United States has not been concluded, in spite of the expressed purposes of both governments and manifestations of inter-American policies in both countries," the negotiations to which he referred were broken off some months ago, and no move has been made to renew them.

However, Dr. Cantilo expressed the opinion that mutual understanding between the United States and Argentina was increasing "morally and materially," and the hope that "we will strengthen these ties—daily since from them will come many benefits for the future of the two countries and the continent as a whole."

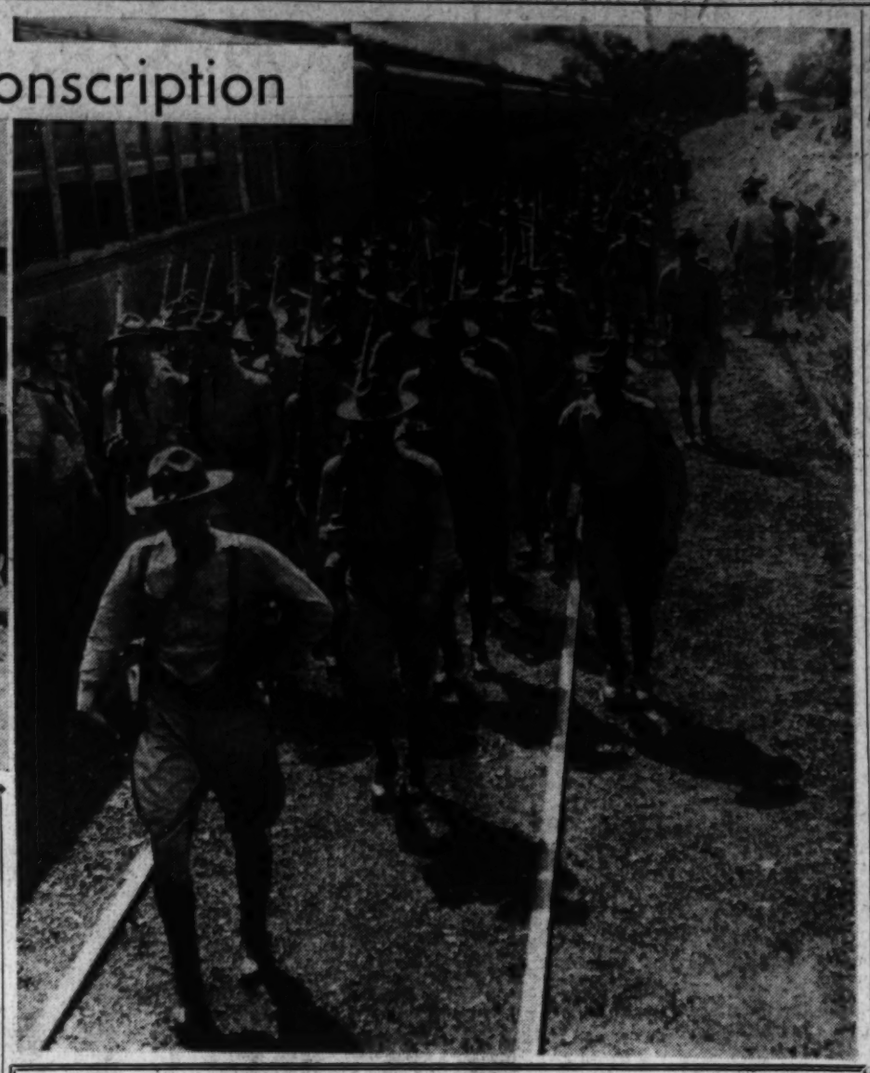
America Debates Peacetime Conscription



TODAY THE NATION talks about military conscription while the United States is at peace. Throughout the country are trained reserves which form additoinal units to the regular Army in wartime. Chief support of the full-time soldiers is the National Guard, a military establishment which gives instruction to civilians. Each summer National Guard members (like those above) hold maneuvers in the field.

Many Lands Have Army Training

U. S. Could Map Program on Wide Variety Used in Other Nations

By Harry W. Baehr, Jr.

If this country should decide to embark on a peacetime program of inforced military training, it would have a wide variety of methods, as practiced in other parts of the world, from which to choose.

Virtually all of Europe, China, Japan, the Union of South Africa, all of South America except Uruguay, and most of the Central American states have some form of compulsory military training. The training ranges from a minimum of 16 to 18 days a year for four years in South Africa to two years of continuous service in many European countries.

The percentage of young men called up for peacetime training also varies considerably. In Argentina, for example, about 34 per cent of the class available in 1937 was called to the colors. In Switzerland virtually every fit man receives training, but there the course—about 90 days' service in the first year and about 200 days' service spread over the succeeding 28 years compares with the ten months exacted of Argentina's conscripts. To be sure, the greater part of the Swiss army has been mobilized for months during the present war emergency.

Every Young Man Must Register

Disregarding minor differences, however, what may be called the classic form of peace-time compulsory military service works out about as follows:

At 17 or 18, every young man in the country must register. Usually he is liable to be called for service at about the age of 20, though most countries provide that service may be postponed until the completion of a course of higher education. In peacetime the number of men that may be called in any one year is limited in the annual defense budgets. Those who are to fill the quota are selected by lot in many instances. Exemption is allowed for physical reasons and, in some cases, for family reasons. In Italy, the regular 18 months of peacetime service may be diminished to 12, 6 or 3 months, depending on the economic status of the family.

Those who are not called for service usually pass into the reserve, and may be summoned for training in an emergency. In many cases, those who do not give personal military service are required to pay a special defense tax.

The term of active service in most of the larger nations employing peacetime conscription is from one to two years. Occasionally this period is shortened for those with a certain standard of education. These frequently joi nth eofficers reserve. Noncommissioned officers and specialist troops usually put in longer terms than infantry privates.

After completing his course of training, the conscript may be continued in the active army for several more years—"on furlough"—or he may pass into the first reserve group. In either case he is liable for immediate service in an emergency. Reservists, of whom there are usually several categories according to age, may be called upon for repetition courses, or refresher courses. Service in the last category of reservists usually terminates at 50 or 60 years of age.

Premilitary Training Compulsory in Italy

Several countries enjoy voluntary or semi-voluntary associations—either rifle clubs or units comparable to our National Guard—to give supplementary training after or before the regular period of active service. In some nations, Italy for example, premilitary training is compulsory. In Germany—before the outbreak of war, at least—the young men served six months in the labor service before entering the army.

One variant on the usual pattern of peacetime conscription is furnished by Russia. There, according to the "Armaments Year-Book" of the League of Nations for 1938, service may be required in the regular army or navy, in mobile territorial units or in military training outside the army. Regular army service, to which about one-third of the recruits are assigned, is for from two to four years, depending on the branch of service. The territorial units, about one-quarter of the conscripts, receive three months training in the first year and additional courses (not more than two months in any one year) during the next four years. Those receiving training outside the army receive periodical courses lasting not more than six months in all and extending over five years.

The concept of total war has introduced in many countries a large measure of general industrial conscription in time of war. Industrial peacetime prepartaion for war is provided in Russia by two years' service for technicians in industrial war establishments. Many countries also have broad voluntary or semi-voluntary organizations for aid raid defense, hospital services and other forms of "passive defense" organized in times of peace and liable to be mobilized in an emergency.

Universal Service Only Way to Raise An Adequate Army

By Joseph Reed

For the first time in its history America last week was talking about military conscription in peacetime.

On Capitol Hill the Nation's legislators spoke at length on the merits of compulsory military training for able-bodied men. President Roosevelt gave his indorsement to a newspaper editorial calling for military instruction, and the Army, through its Chief of Staff Gen. George C. Marshall, approved some limited form of peacetime training. Last Sunday's Gallup Poll reflected public sentiment on the subject as divided evenly.

American history shows that universal military instruction has always been a source of difficulty whenever the need for national preparedness has arisen. This has been true because some people have regarded compulsory training as a departure from the spirit of democracy. Others regard such instruction is bound up with the democratic principles, since each man would deem it his job to aid in defense of the homeland.

Volunteers Not Sufficient

Conscription has occupied such a prominent place in national defense schemes because the system of volunteer enlistment, while bringing good results at the outset, has never produced an Army adequate for defense in any of America's major wars.

Thus, George Washington had these words to say after the Revolutionary War:

"Had we formed a permanent Army in the beginning, which, by continuance of the same men in service, had been capable of discipline, we should never have had to retreat."

Following the disasters which the American Army sustained in the War of 1812, Thomas Jefferson asserted "that we must train and classify the whole of our male citizenry and make military instruction a regular part of collegiate education. We can never be safe until this is done." Since the founder of the University of Virginia made that statement, the United States has fought four major wars and in none of them was universal training adopted until other means of recruiting had completely failed.

The dual system to provide for the common defense—the Regular Army implemented by the State Militia—was created by the Philadelphia Convention of 1787 because, in the opinion of the Founding Fathers, monarchy and militarism were synonymous. Without the army the king was helpless. To grant the Federal Government the right to maintain a standing Army of proportions adequate to national defense, it was felt, might place the Republic in jeopardy. The power reserved to the States to organize, train, and control the State Militia was designed to counteract this possibility, but experience has shown that 48 different armies of militia under the control of 48 State governments greatly complicates the common defense.

States Jealous Over Militia

That this power reserved to the States is still jealously guarded by them may be judged by the opposition to the President's request for the right to call out the militia to replace contingents of the Regular Army which may have to be dispatched on foreign assignment.

To circumvent the paradoxical situation arising from the constitutional mandate requiring the Federal Government to provide for the common defense and yet granting to the States control of the militia, several techniques have been used.

Shortly after Jefferson urged that military training be included in curricula of colleges, Alden Partridge founded in 1819 the American Literary, Scientific and Military Academy (now Norwich University), the first school to offer a course in military science and tactics.

In 1862 the Federal Government followed the same idea when President Lincoln signed the so-called Morrill Act—the Land-Grant College Act—by which in consideration of grants of land by the Federal Government to the States, they in turn would incorporate military training in their respective curricula. Notwithstanding that the act was ambiguously drawn insofar as the question of making the course compulsory or voluntary was concerned, some 117 colleges and universities to date have taken advantage of the provisions of the act. However, the Supreme Court has held that the regents of a college or university have the right to make the course compulsory.

Two universities—Wisconsin and Minnesota—have made the course voluntary.

WHEN AMERICA WENT TO WAR in 1917 the inadequacy of voluntary enlistment in the Army soon became apparent. To build up fighting strength Uncle Sam had to resort to conscription of manpower—the selective service draft act. During the war over 24,000,000 men were registered for military duty, some 3,000,000 (like those above) were drafted into the Army, taught the fundamentals of war.

From the viewpoint of expanding the military training for officer personnel, the lack of explicit language in the act has tended to weaken its application. Former Secretary Weeks of the War Department took the position that military training in land-grant colleges could be made voluntary. Former Attorney General Mitchell delivered the same interpretation. As a result, more colleges and universities may be expected to abolish the compulsory feature.

In 1935 Senator Gerald P. Nye and Representative Kvale, of Minnesota, introduced identical bills (S 3309 and HR 8950) in an attempt to amend the National Defense Acts of 1916 and 1920 to the end that no military unit could be "established or maintained at any school or college with Federal funds," until such institution shall satisfy the Secretary of War that enrollment in such a course is elective and not compulsory."

161,938 Students Got Training

Notwithstanding this controversy it is interesting to note that there were in 1939 365 R. O. T. C. units in 274 schools and that 161,938 students received military instruction. Some 800 Regular Army officers and selected enlisted men supervised this training.

A second method of circumventing the dual system was the development of the National Guard on Federal line. This enabled the War Department to supervise training and equipment as provided by the National Guard Status Act of 1933. However, in spite of the large appropriations which Congress has granted from time to time, the efficiency of the National Guard, in the opinion of military experts, leaves much to be desired.

A third method of circumvention is the etsablishment of Citizens Military Training Camps (C. M. T. C.) in which a citizen by attending four summer training camps becomes eligible to take the examination for commissioned officer in the Reserve Corps. Enlistment in this form of training service has averaged about 30,000 per year.

Several bills have been introduced into Congress designed to expand military training without impairing the dual system. In 1939 Representative Kent Keller, of Illinois, introduced a bill to organize the "American School Army," calling for 21,850 volunteers to attend this school, which would be set up in sections at various training camps. Volunteers between the ages of 15 and 18 would be eligible for enrollment. Military science and tactics would be taught from two to three hours daily and the rest of the day would be devoted to vocational and academic subjects.

In explaining the background of the bill, Representative Keller said that the proposed school curriculum would incorporate the ideas of training given at West Point and Heidelberg insofar as students of the above age were able to undertake the training.

At present there is an effort in Congress to give military training in the CCC camps. Representative Jed Johnson's bill would make such training elective, while Representative Randolph's bill would make it compulsory. In the former bill, military training would be offered for six hours a week; in the latter, eight hours a week.

These Methods Prove Makeshift

While it is true that these media offer various kinds of military training to those who desire it, it is at best somewhat of a makeshift system, an inefficient substitute. Past experience in this country in actual warfare has shown that conscription has been the only way to raise an army large enough for victory.

In the Civil War the volunteer system was exchanged for the draft, and the same was true in the World War.

The Military Training Camps Association's committee on universal training and service, after a conference with War Department officials, made this report:

Gallup Poll Shows Nation Evenly Divided on Issue

"Your committee finds that it would require certainly not less than 500,000 more enlistments to service and operate 50,000 planes recommended by the President. Past experience compels the conclusion that nothing like such a number can be obtained in peace time by voluntary enlistment, and that planes and other materials recommended are of no value whatsoever without a trained personnel to maintain them.

"Generally it requires as long to train the personnel as to produce the material. Reliance on voluntary recruiting to obtain three-quarters of a million men needed at once is as unfair and undemocratic as it is inefficient and wasteful."

The committee also recommended the prompt passage by Congress of a compulsory military service law. The War Department was asked by the committee "to make plans for the holding at different points in the United States during the summer of 1940 business men's training camps based upon the Plattsburg idea of this character held in 1915, and in such camps to train as many men as the War Department considers practicable."

Army Better Equipped Now

Basic courses in flying will be offered by the Civil Aeronautics Authority to provide military training for 45,000 new pilots by July 1, 1941. In addition, the Authority plans to give 9,000 pilots secondary training, to train 3,000 instructors and to give courses of from 15 to 25 hours to 42,000 additional pilots who have already had varying amounts of training. The 45,000 pilots will be divided into three groups. The first begins its training June 15. The second and third start with the fall and spring semesters of the colleges making this training available. At present 435 colleges and universities in 75 communities have this instruction.

This preliminary training will enable the War Department to weed out those unfit for flying, thereby saving valuable time in getting advanced training started. Furthermore, those thus trained, plus those being trained in the service schools, will give a nucleus around which an adequate air force can be built.

From a practical standpoint the War Department is not equipped to train with dispatch the large number of men who would be made immediately available by conscription. Census figures indicate there would be about 1,000,000 men between the ages of 18 and 22 ready for service. However, about 30 per cent of this number would be found physically unfit, that is, on the data obtained from the last war. It is further estimated that one officer would be needed for every 20 conscripts and one non-commissioned officer for every five. To obtain this number of commissioned and non-commissioned officers the War Department would have to call into active service 110,000 Reserve Officers, its 30,000 potential non-commissioned officers in the Regular Army enlisted reserves, and the National Guard non-coms.

Army Better Equipped Now

The War Department will likewise be faced with a shortage of material including uniforms, shoes, tents, arms, ammunition, and training planes. The Quartermaster General recently informed Congress that the Army had only nine months supply of uniforms for even the Regular Army. However, Army officials believe that the 25 firms now making uniforms could increase their output to 10,000 a week. A new order for 1,523,322 uniforms has already been placed by the Quartermaster General's office.

Another shortage is matter of barracks. Rush construction of cantonments will be necessary. However, the situation is much better in this respect than at the beginning of the last war. The Army is better equipped with training areas, and most of them have been provided by the WPA with sewer facilities and electric conduits in spots where barracks could be built.

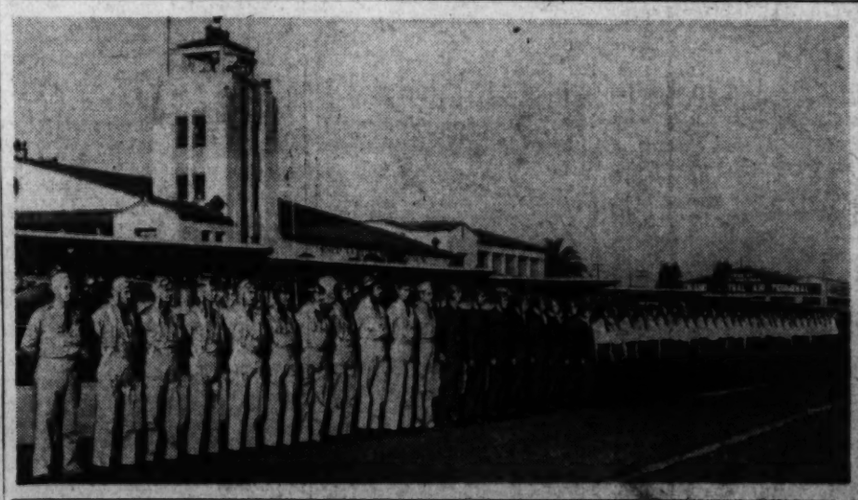
In general, it is safe to say that the experience in preparing training grounds, in handling conscripts, and in military instruction gained in preparing for the last World War will be most valuable in the present national defense program. Classes of conscripts can be drawn as facilities for their training are made ready.

The justification for universal military training has perhaps been best stated by two persons, although their statements were issued more than one hundred and fifty years apart.

After the Revolutionary War, referring to the difficulties of raising

CITIZENS MILITARY TRAINING CAMPS (C.M.T.C.) have provided summer training for nearly 30,000 Americans every year. By training four summers under the C.M.T.C. a citizen becomes eligible to take the examination for commissioned officer in the United States Army Reserve Corps.

RESERVE OFFICERS TRAINING CORPS is active in many American schools and universities. In 1862 Congress passed an act granting land to colleges with the proviso that military instruction would become a part of the curricula. Last year the R.O.T.C. had 35 units in 274 schools, trained 161,938 students.



CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY has embarked on a program which calls for 45,000 pilots trained in military aviation by July 1, 1941. Basic courses in flying will lay the groundwork for later advanced training. Today 435 colleges and universities insert CAA aviation instruction in their curricula.

Ford Empire Marks 37th Birthday

Industry Started On $28,000 Cash, Founders Still Looking Ahead

By David J. Wilkie
Associated Press Automotive Editor

Detroit, June 15.—Just 37 years ago tomorrow, a 39-year-old self-taught mechanical engineer completed the incorporation of a new automobile company, to start operations in a two-story frame shop on Detroit's East Side, but destined to become the greatest family-owned industrial empire the world ever has known.

It was Henry Ford, whose dream of a self-powered vehicle had taken shape many years earlier in the form of a none-too-successful threshing machine and later in a number of famous racing automobiles. He had completed the task of persuading a dozen friends and acquaintances to gather together $28,000, less than a third of the proposed capitalization for the Ford Motor Co.

There were at the time more than 150 automobile companies in the field and others were springing up over night. Thus, with the exception of Ford himself, none of the original stockholders was overly enthusiastic about the prospects of a long life for the new company.

The stockholders included a couple of law partners, who accepted shares as compensation for work in drafting the incorporation papers; a couple of machinists named John and Horace Dodge, who received stock for work done or contemplated; there was a carpenter who owned a shop Ford wanted for an assembly plant; he accepted stock in lieu of rent; there was also a woman who put in $100, the par value of one share of stock. Sixteen years afterward she sold her holdings for $260,000.

Business Now Reaches Nearly Every Nation

Today the business that began in the relatively small two-story frame structure in Detroit's Mack avenue reaches into virtually every country of the world, employs directly upward of 165,000 workers and lists assets, according to its most recent financial statement, of $691,911,949.53. It is wholly owned by Henry and Clara Bryant Ford and their son, Edsel Ford.

Whether the meteoric success that attended the venture begun on June 16, 1903, was due to the mechanical genius of Henry Ford or to the business ability of the men he was able to bring into the company probably never will be answered unequivocally. Certain it is, however, that it was Ford who insisted on alloting himself only a modest salary and turning back into expansion the profits that came in undreamed of volume.

It was Ford, too, who insisted on contesting the Selden patent suit, most famous of all litigation developing in connection with the progress of the motorcar industry. The suit, which accused Ford of infringing on a motor patent, was filed against him soon after he started his company in 1903. It was in the courts for eight years before Ford won a final victory and—as he subsequently remarked—created his own competition.

Throughout the ensuing years that saw Ford become world-renowned through his $5-a-day minimum wage plan in 1914; his $400,000 peace ship expedition in 1915; his adaptation of mass production principles to car manufacture; his building of eagle boat submarine chasers on a volume assembly basis in 1918; his acquisition of complete control of his company in 1919; his defiance of the National Recovery Administration in 1934 and a long list of other noteworthy activities, he has maintained that greatest of all was the Selden patent suit victory.

Motorcar Great Aid to Education

Without that victory, he said, there could have been no automobile industry as it is known today, with vehicles within the price reach of the average individual.

To Ford the automobile long ago became something more than just an article of merchandise.

"The motorcar," he says, "has become one of the greatest instrumentalities for education, so essential to all human progress. By bringing people together and enabling them to mix, a greater common understanding has become possible among people in widely separated sections."

The business that started in 1903 with $28,000 in cash today has its home plant on a 1,200-acre site in nearby Dearborn, where are coordinated to the manufacture of automobiles and farm tractors—the facilities of a steel manufacturing plant, a rolling mill, a giant tool and die shop, a huge tire factory, a glass plant, a soybean meal factory producing oil for enamel and meal for plastics, and dozens of other divisions of lesser size and importance.

And Ford, who will be 77 a few weeks hence, still looks ahead to further accomplishments. He startles you with a matter-of-fact assertion that he can, under certain conditions apply mass production principles to the manufacture of airplanes and within six months have 1,000 machines a day leaving his factories.

Plan Would Forbid Changes in Design

There are several conditions but all look to the elimination of any outside interference and no changes in design once the production facilities are set up.

You may or may not believe that Ford can make that many airplanes in a day; it is worthy of note, however, that he measured his words when he made the claim and the care with which he reiterated the conditions left no doubt that he has carefully studied all the problems involved in such a gigantic undertaking.

The 37 years that have elapsed since Ford begged his friends and acquaintances to invest in his new company have dealt kindly with him. He is in excellent health and proves it to you by thumping himself vigorously on the chest with two clenched fists until you protest in alarm.

Ford tells you he never worries about anything excepting the health and well being of his family and you readily believe it when you see him walking about the yards and gardens surrounding the plant and laboratories, swinging his arms fore and aft, quite plainly at peace with himself and the world.

Thousands Will Attend Summer Religious Conclaves

Nearby College Campuses Will Be Scene Of Meetings of Church Workers At Which Theological Leaders Will Speak

By Robert Tate Allan

As the annual exodus of college students from nearby campuses reaches its peak this week, another army and men and women will arrive to take over dormitories, classrooms and dining halls.

They will be Washington churchmen, delegates to summer religious conferences, conventions and similar meetings at Western Maryland, Hood, Mary Washington and other colleges.

Meanwhile, as general summer religious activities get off in full swing, other church workers will be attending daily vacation Bible schools, services in city parks or on church lawns, or Catholic retreats. Many others will be romping at the church picnics, outings or other social affairs.

Western Maryland Is First Host

Especially noteworthy will be the Sixteenth Annual Young People's Conference and the Seventeenth Annual Officers' and Teachers' Conference, both sponsored by the District of Columbia Sunday School Association, with the Y. M. C. A. religious work department cooperating, which will meet jointly on Friday, Saturday and Sunday at Western Maryland College, Westminster.

The assembly, combining a spiritual retreat and vacation, will draw men and women of all ages and occupations and denominations from the Nation's Capital. High school and college students, business executives, government officials and clerks, salesmen, housewives—all active church workers—will meet to discuss the central theme of "Christ for Every Man," as if in challenge to the European dictators' threats against Christian civilization.

Features of the opening day's sessions will be a dinner and fellowship hour at 6 p. m., when Dr. Fred G. Holloway, host college president, will bring greetings. The Rev. T. Guthrie Speers, pastor of the Brown Memorial Presbyterian Church, Baltimore, Md., will address the evening rally. And what such gathering would be complete without the time-honored King Solomon's Court? A "portrayal of songs and words of wisdom," with a peppering of wholesome fun, this year's court will have Norman Lufburrow, of the Baltimore Y. M. C. A., in the regal role.

On the recreational side, there will be opportunities for tennis, swimming and golf; a baseball game between the married and single men, and trips to Gettysburg and Frederick.

Young People's Conference Headed by Bowers

Among leaders of the round table discussion groups will be the Rev. Leslie L. Bowers, pastor of the Fifteenth Street Christian Church; the Rev. Harry V. Porter, Westminster Memorial Presbyterian Church, and Mrs. Porter; Mrs. Robert C. Savage, wife of the Metropolitan Baptist assistant pastor; the Rev. Edwin H. Tuller, assistant pastor of Calvary Baptist Church; Miss Annabel Spangle and Dr. Warren D. Bowman, pastor of the Washington City Church of the Brethren.

Dr. Bowman, authority on marriage problems, and author of the book, "Preparation for Marriage," and Dr. Lufburrow will discuss personal problems with the delegates.

Officers of the Young People's Conference are Leslie L. Bowers, president, and the following denominational vice presidents: Richard Fenton, Baptist; Cathreen Kane, Disciples; Howard Stingle, Methodist; James Huddleston, Presbyterian; Dorothy Hetrick, Lutheran; Hilda Luttrell and Marion Chambers, Baltimore area; Doris Everaft, secretary; John A. Patterson, jr., counsellor, and Chester Jones, assistant counsellor.

Officials of the Officers' and Teachers' Conference are William Sheriff Jones, president; Page McK. Etchison, president of the District of Columbia Organized Bible Class Association, executive secretary; the Rev. Robert C. Savage, song leader, and Mrs. Etchison, pianist.

Sunday school departmental work will be discussed in forums under the leadership of Dr. Charles E. Resler, president of the Sunday School Association; the Rev. Mr. Savage and William S. Jones.

Close on the heels of the Westminster conclave will come the annual District of Columbia Christian Endeavor convention, set for July 6 on the campus of Mary Washington College, Fredericksburg, Va. Several hundred youths from many local churches will hear conference discussions, led by outstanding local and out-of-town men and women, among them Dr. Edward O. Clark, pastor of Chevy Chase Baptist Church; Dr. Louis S. Potter, music director of Calvary Methodist Church; Dr. C. Hawthorne, pastor of Wallace Memorial United Presbyterian Church; the Rev. John L. Mixon, director of the Washington Federation of Churches' social welfare department, and others. Miss Pauline Shoemaker is president of the District of Columbia Endeavor Union.

Another popular summer meeting spot is Massanetta Springs, where the Central Atlantic United Christian Adult Regional Conference will be held from July 15-22. World relations, basic social problems, community issues, church life and "Outreach," Christian family life, personal faith and experience, the Bible in life and other topics will be discussed by noted religious leaders from several States.

Many Noted Religious Leaders to Meet

They will include Ernest J. Arnold, secretary of the North Carolina Council of Churches; Beverly M. Boyd, rector of Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, Va.; Dr. Warren D. Bowman, of this city; D. T. Caldwell, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Petersburg, Va.; T. K. Currie, director of religious education, synod of Virginia, Presbyterian Church, and Lucille Du Bose, Stanford, Ky.

Also, William O. Easton, general secretary of the Philadelphia Sunday School Council of Christian Education; Z. B. Edworthy, secretary of the West Virginia Council of Religious Education; J. C. Faw, director of the Richmond Community Council; James E. Fidler, director of Christian education, West Virginia Baptist convention, and Edward D. Grant, of Richmond, Va., executive secretary of the committee of education and publication, the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

Director of the conference will be Harry C. Munro, director of adult work and extension, International Council of Religious Education at Chicago.

Many local people will actively participate, among them Page McK. Etchison, religious work secretary of the Central Y. M. C. A., and president of the District of Columbia Organized Bible Class Association, who will serve as one of the promotional secretaries; Dr. John W. Rustin, pastor of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, vespers speaker; George E. Harris, executive secretary of the Bible association, and others. Paul L. Vogt, educational director for the Federal Agriculture Service, also may take part. T. Z. Koo, world-noted Chinese lecturer-educator, also has been invited to speak.

Annually increasing in interest among Catholic men are spiritual retreats now in progress at the Manresa Retreat House, on the Severn River, opposite the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md.

Leaving lawsuits, telephones, newspapers and radios behind, local Catholic lawyers are spending this week-end at the stately white mansion under the spiritual guidance of the Rev. Robert S. Lloyd, S. J.

6,000 Men Have Visited Retreat

More than 6,000 men, Catholic and Protestant alike, have felt Father Lloyd's inspiring influence since he left the Georgetown Preparatory School rectorship in 1935 to become Manresa director. Men somehow seem to get closer to themselves during a few days at Manresa. There they may worship in the chapel, read in the library, lounge on the long porch, or stroll about the grounds. Their rooms are furnished with prayer stand, devotion book, crucifix, washstand, bed and other equipment.

Baltimore police, third section, will visit Manresa this Friday, remaining until Sunday night or Monday morning, while on subsequent week-ends will come retreat units from various parishes in the Washington and Baltimore archdiocese, as well as Washington police, led by Maj. Ernest W. Brown; local firemen, under Chief Porter, and other groups.

Manresa Began Operation in 1926

The Manresa project, operated by the League of Laymen's Retreats of the two dioceses, had its inception in 1926, although the retreat movement in the Baltimore archdiocese began back in 1914. Dr. M. D'Arcy Magee is president of the Washington section of the league.

The Washington Catholic Evidence Guild services in Franklin Park, Fourteenth and K streets northwest, and in the Public Library Park, Ninth and K streets northwest, also continue to draw crowds on Sunday afternoons and evenings, with scholarly priests from Catholic University and Catholic laymen conducting the programs.

Meanwhile, plans have been completed for the opening on July 7 of the thirty-third annual series of open air religious services in Lincoln Park under the sponsorship of the Young Men's Christian Association and Inter-Church Committee. The Berean Men's Bible Class of Ninth Street Christian Church, will conduct the first sessions, with Dr. Clifford H. Jope, pastor, speaking.

Come Labor Day week-end, more than 400 men and women will converge on the rolling campus of Western Maryland College for the nineteenth annual summer conference of the District of Columbia Organized Bible Class Association.

There they will hear the central theme of "The Christian Challenge to the Modern World" discussed by many of the country's leading churchmen.

Dr. Rasmussen To Participate

They will include Dr. Frederick K. St... pit of the National Broadcasting Co., and pastor of the Clinton Avenue Community Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., conference speaker; Arthur R. Bodmer, director of adult work for the Pennsylvania State Council of Christian Education, forum leader, and Dr. Carl C. Rasmussen, now pastor of Luther Place Memorial Church here, and who in September will become professor of systematic theology at Gettysburg Theological Seminary, conference preacher.

According to Page McK. Etchison, more than 300 enrollments already have been received for the conference, where delegates will exchange the latest methods of Bible class promotion, hear inspiring messages and enjoy fellowship and recreational hours.

Young people of Washington, New Castle, Carlisle and Baltimore presbyteries will mingle at summer conferences at Hood College, Frederick, from July 6 to 13; at West Nottingham, Colora, Md., from June 26 to July 3, and also at Hood from June 29 to July 6.

The Rev. D. Hobart Evans, pastor of the Hyattsville Presbyterian Church, and Dr. S. J. Venable, of Colora, will direct the young people's and senior conferences, respectively, at Hood. Others on the faculty will include the Rev. Robert P. Davis, of Towson (Md.) Presbyterian Church; the Rev. Walter F. Wolf, of Arlington (Va.) Presbyterian Church; Wallace Ashley, of Cumberland, Md., and others.

Graduates of the Hood conferences and other Christian youth leaders expect to attend "an exploratory conference on Christianity in the world crisis" at Silver Bay, N. Y., from July 16 to 24.

Washington Bible Workers To Attend Convention

Several hundred Bible workers from the Washington area are planning to attend the golden jubilee convention of the World-wide Baraca and Philathea Union of Bible Classes from July 9 to 14 in the First Baptist Church, Syracuse, N. Y., where the late Marshall Hudson conceived the organization back in 1890.

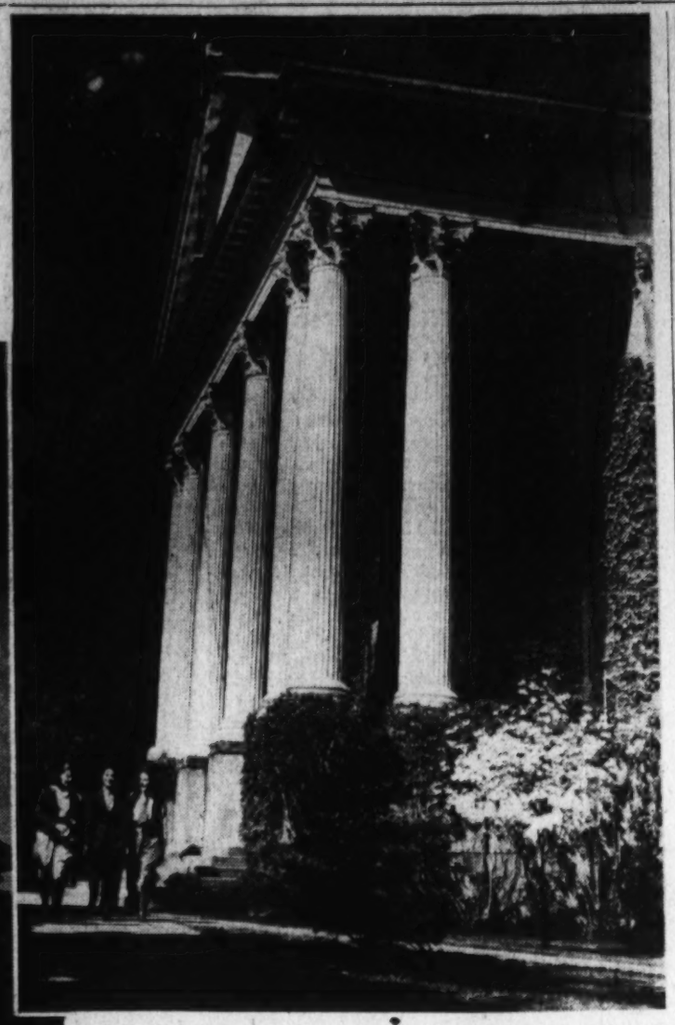
The world headquarters of the union are at 907 Fifteenth street northwest here. Miss Henrietta Heron, Washingtonian, is world counsellor, and Edwin J. Barrett, of the First Baptist Church, Alexandria, Va., is world treasurer.

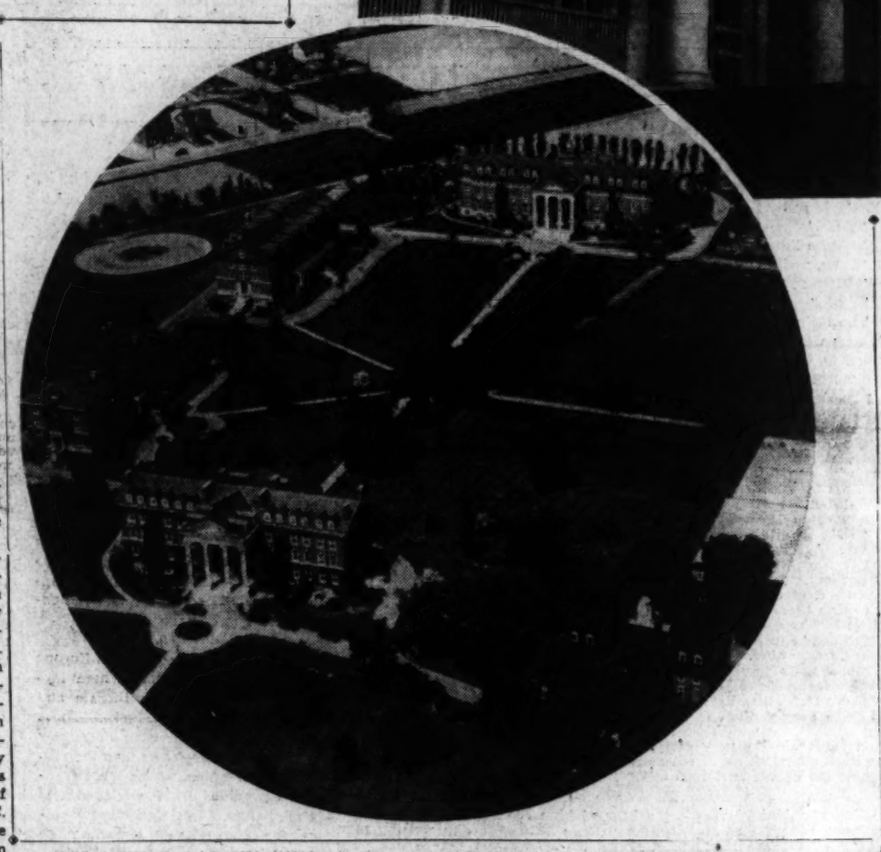
A church recreational leaders' institute is slated to be held from August 26 to September 2 at Camp Letts, the "Y" camp at Edgewater, Md. Participating will be the District of Columbia Sunday School Association, the District of Columbia Federation of Baptist Young People's Unions, the District of Columbia Christian Endeavor Union, and the Methodist young people. It will be under the auspices of the religious work and physical education departments of the "Y."

The Maryland State Luther League, embracing Washington and that State, will stage a rally today at Camp Nawakwa, 10 miles northwest of Gettysburg, Pa., with Fred Mowen, of Hagerstown, in charge. The leaguers will make a week-end trip to Konnarock, Va., mission on June 22-23-24.

While no complete schedule of daily vacation Bible schools is yet available, many local churches are planning either individual schools or schools jointly conducted with other churches.

Nearby college campuses will not be idle this summer as a big program of religious conferences is scheduled for the next three months. Thousands of theological students are expected to attend these conclaves to hear noted religious leaders from the Capital and other parts of the Nation. At Mary Washington College (right), Fredericksburg, Va., the District of Columbia Christian Endeavor Convention will be held from July 3-6. Hood College (bottom), will be the scene of the Presbyterian regional youth conference June 29 to July 13. Below is the Manresa Retreat on the Severn River in Maryland where Catholic men gather for summer week-end spiritual retreats.





One of the most popular summer meeting spots for church workers will be the Central Atlantic United Christian Adult Regional Conference at Massanetta Springs, July 15-22. Noted religious leaders will discuss world relations, basic social problems, community issues, church life, Christian family life, personal faith and experience, and other topics an adequate army, Gen. "Light Horse" Harry Lee said:

"While I record with delight the facts which maintain our native and national courage, I feel a horror lest demagogues who flourish in a representative system of government (the best, when virtue rules, the wit of man can devise) shall avail themselves of the occasional testimony to produce a great result. Convinced as I am that a government is a murderer of its citizens which sends them to the field uninformed and untaught, where they are to meet men of the same age and strength, mechanized by education and discipline for battle, I cannot withhold my denunciation of its wickedness and folly."

The second statement was made last week by Columnist Dorothy Thompson when she said "that the idea of universal service in the defense forces of the Nation was a product of the French Revolution. Far from being an undemocratic notion, it was born together with the idea of personal freedom, and logically so. For no one has a right to freedom unless he is prepared to defend it with all other free men . . . Actually the only form of military defense that is not a menace to democracy is that built upon universal service. The oldest and, for its size the strongest democracy in the world today is the Swiss. Like our own it was founded not upon nationality but upon an idea; it came into being with an oath—the oath to be free and to defend that freedom. It is a democracy in which every citizen is a soldier and every soldier a citizen. And it has thus avoided militarism . . . An army based upon universal service cannot become a state within a state, because its social frontiers are coincident with the frontiers of the state. An army of all democratic citizens is a democratic army."

7 District Inquiries Yield Small Results

By James D. Secrest

THE RELEASE OF THE Eberharter subcommittee's report on its liquor investigation has concluded the harvesting of this year's crop of inquiries by the House District Committee. And, while the furrowing was fun at times, the crop, it must be admitted, was a failure.

The committee ordered seven inquiries, conducted five of them, and dropped two during the year. While it is too early to predict whether the ABC Board will heed any of the recommendations in the Eberharter report, the other investigations, except for some improvements made at Blue Plains, produced only a good crop of newspaper copy.

District reorganization and taxes consumed more words and wind. Reorganization died at the end of a Presidential knife thrust and a bad case of inertia, while taxes succumbed to shock, abrasions, and a broken heart after twice being thrown out of the House.

The Blue Plains inquiry, thanks chiefly to Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, was a publicity coup, but the old boys at the Home for the Aged and Infirm say that the meals have reverted to the pre-inquiry status. The investigation did, however, gain some physical improvements and a change in administration at the institution.

Scheduled investigations of fortune telling and baby brokers rode along for a while on a fanfare of publicity, but Representative William T. Schulte for one reason or another never got around to holding any hearings.

* * * * * * *

AN ATTEMPT TO CONDUCT a recess investigation of District traffic also appears to have fizzled out even before it was ordered.

Even Tommy D'Alesandro, who sponsored the resolution, was not seriously disappointed at the refusal of the House Rules Committee to act. He had admitted previously that he didn't relish the prospect of spending the summer in Washington. Then, too, there won't be another primary for two years.

D'Alesandro again revealed his alertness last week when he came out with a statement denouncing Mussolini's declaration of war almost before the words were out of Duce's mouth.

RENEWED EFFORTS to launch another liquor investigation can be expected when the 77th Congress meets unless war or national defense have blacked out all irrelevant legislation.

THE MIDWEST IS MAKING another bid for the National Capital. This time it is hooked up to national defense.

Representative Lambertson (Republican), of Kansas, inserted in the Congressional Record a letter from a constituent editor who suggested that a "subsidiary" Capital be established at Atchison, Kans. (Population 13,024.)

"Every day to the Atchison Globe," he wrote, "comes dispatches, columns, and syndicated articles showing that the people of Washington are alarmed about the war raging in Europe. My only conclusion is that the Washington people see visions of an invasion.

"The good old town of Atchison, Kans., wishing to alleviate the sufferings of Washington people, invites and urges that a subsidiary National Capital be created in Atchison, which is in the heart of America."

COMMISSIONER JOHN RUSSELL YOUNG got his baptism of fire at the last Senate District Committee meeting. After listening to Chairman King reiterate his favorite quip that the District Commissioners are his bosses, Young, when called on at the conclusion of the session, remarked that he had considered that the Senator as his boss.

"Oh, no," shot back Senator King. "I always listen to the commissioners and do what they advise except when I disagree with them."

SENATOR TYDINGS, OF MARYLAND, assumed the role of the late Royal S. Copeland as the member of the Senate District Committee who takes delight in bearding the chairman at every opportunity.

When Tydings attends a committee meeting, which is seldom, he almost takes control away from the "mayor." At the last meeting he reminded one of a Nazi blitzkrieg in action with King in the position of Chamberlain armed with an umbrella.

He worked so fast that he almost rushed through a bill which would force the District to repay all erroneously collected special assessments as far back as 1874, if claimed, and would cost the city, in the opinion of the auditor, probably $2,000,000. As it was he opened the door for the claimants' lawyer at the District Building.

Almost Undamaged

Paris today is a doleful spot. That once gay capital resounds only to the clank of German tanks and the clomp of German boots. Two-thirds of the city's population is reported to have fled. Those remaining quietly ponder behind closed doors and barred shop windows the tragedy that has befallen France.

It is difficult for Americans enjoying both peace and relative security to visualize the dismay, the sorrow and bewilderment that weigh heavily upon every French heart. By taking their capital—their beloved city—Germany has struck a powerful blow at the morale of Frenchmen. Gloomy and tragic as the outlook is for France, however, it is not utterly hopeless.

Premier Reynaud concluded his broadcast of Thursday night with a hopeful declaration that "the day of resurrection will come." More significant is the long-range optimism which induced the French to surrender their magnificent capital instead of risking its destruction. In the invasion of 1870-71 precisely the opposite course was followed. Paris resisted and was besieged for several months. Of course, the destructive power of the German invaders 70 years ago is not comparable to that of today. But even in that day damage was extensive.

Paris today could not have withstood the assaults of the German war machine as it did in 1870-71. Perhaps that is the chief reason why the city was not made a battle ground. But the preservation of the capital also definitely suggests that Frenchmen still have every confidence in a future in which Paris will once more be the center of French government and culture.

It was too easily assumed that success for the German army would mean destruction of Paris. Even in defeat the French and all mankind, will find a good deal of comfort in the fact that this great capital survives almost undamaged.

More Blessed To Give

The response to the Children's Crusade for Children is gratifying evidence of generosity and a feeling of human brotherhood among our youngsters. The total collection for the air of refugee children will be between thirteen and fourteen million pennies.

That amount might have been collected more easily in other ways, In fact, large lump sums and valuable services were donated to conduct the crusade. But its organizers have made plain that it was in no sense a "drive." One important purpose was to stimulate the natural sympathy in American children for less fortunate persons of their genefation abroad. The results indicate that this tributions of children in low-income families, who gave more in proportion to their means than those from wealthier groups. From homes for the deaf, blind and crippled came letters welcoming the opportunity to help. As the director of one institution wrote, "it has been wonderful for them to learn that life is not always 'get' but sometimes 'give.'" Here is a practical application of a well-known proverb.

The Court Swelters

Probably no group of Washingtonians is more sensitive to the blitzkrieg that Old Sol unloosed last week than the judges and employes of the Municipal Court. For the court has looked forward to spending the summer within the air-cooled chambers of the new Municipal Court Building, and its hopes have not been realized.

Construction work on this $1,234,000 courthouse was finished by the middle of April. Since that time the work of furnishing the structure has gone leisurely forward, for it cannot be occupied before July 1. Now the building has been fully completed. But judges must administer justice in the sweat of their brows for two more weeks because no funds will be available for its operation until the new fiscal year begins.

Sweltering court employes may well feel that an injustice is being done to the agents of justice. But this is one case in which there can be no judicial interference with the edicts of Congress. The legislative and executive branches are providing this judicial branch with all the comforts of spring in summer—to say nothing of the convenient modern quarters the new building offers—but they are taking their own sweet time about it.

In the circumstances no member of the local court could be properly reprimanded if he should express his appreciation for this improvement by paraphrasing the old hymn: Congress moves with mysterious delay its wonders to perform.

Stalin Steals a Base

Nazi diplomats have worked hard to clothe their government's use of naked force with a drapery of far-fetched explanations. But Von Ribbentrop at his most tropical has never equalled the excuses found by Russia to justify the military occupation of Lithuania yesterday.

According to the Moscow foreign office, the Lithuanian government, although already under Russian control, was preparing to throw its few thousand soldiers into an attack on the Soviet state. It was charged with plotting with Estonia and Latvia to establish an anti-Russian bloc which would have had a total population of 5,000,000 people, as opposed to the 183,000,000 of jeopardized Russia. The danger was so grave, according to Comrade Molotoff, that Lithuania just had to be taken over before it could start a blitzkrieg.

For the dilution of honesty this Communist eyewash is weaker even than anything prepared in Moscow to justify the aggression against Finland. But some sort of rigmarole had to be trotted out by the Kremlin for the simple reason that the real purpose behind the seizure of Lithuanian territory could not be announced within Hitler's hearing.

That reason is, however, obvious. The Russian government is terrified by the speed and magnitude of the German victories in the west. Consequently, while there is still time, it seeks to provide Russia with a better defensive frontier against Germany. To do this, Lithuania must be annexed, and also probably Latvia and Estonia, carefully implicated in the farcical "plot" which Molotoff has cleverly detected—probably after hatching it.

The Russian war with Finland was undertaken to give the great city of Leningrad better protection from the north. The present move, which is unlikely to encounter anything like the same heroic resistance, is clearly designed to extend this same protection to the south and west of Leningrad. But whether these seizures would mean much if Germany should ever decide to start in on Russia is more doubtful.

In the fact that Russia obviously fears this eventuality is found the real importance of the development. For Russia fear of Germany may encourage Moscow to back Turkey in such a way that the latter will enter the war on the side of the Allies against Italy. And that same fear might even operate to make Russia attempt a sudden seizure of the Rumanian province of Bessarabia, for the same strategic reasons which explain the current occupation of Lithuania. In that case the complications would be almost beyond human power to understand, much less adjust.

As Germany gains in power, anxiety in Russia increases. Much as some Americans anticipate Nazi aggression in the New World, but with far better reason, the Russians are anxious about what a Germany wholly dominent in central and western Europe would mean for them. This unresolved and growing Russian anxiety is one of the factors which lend substance to the belief that the defeat of the French armies is not the final chapter of this war.

In the meantime another little state, created by the Treaty of Versailles, is erased from the map. Latvia and Estonia may count themselves singularly lucky if they do not soon follow Lithuania into oblivion. Naturally the one of the trio lying next to the German border was grabbed by Russia first.

Of all the new national boundaries laid down in Europe with so much fanfare just over 20 years ago, precisely three remain as then ordained. Rumania, Yugoslavia and Bungaria remain in what is euphemistically called peace, within frontiers as they were in 1920. But Bulgaria doesn't anticipate that this situation will be permanent. And if there were ever two small capitals in which crossed fingers are in order, their names are Bucharest and Belgrade.

War And Business

Instead of panic, news of the fall of Paris brought with it advances in domestic stock prices and increased stability in speculative commodity markets. There are a number of reasons for the surprising resistance thus shown to developments which have increased the chances for an early termination of the war with consequent loss of war orders.

For one thing, the security and comsevere declines due to the reverses suffered by the Allies when the war was carried into the Netherlands and Belgium. According to the business review of the Federal Reserve Board, these abrupt price changes were "caused in part by high-pitched speculative activity, swayed by the uncertainty of pending events."

The surprising ability shown by domestic business to withstand the depressing effect of current developments in Europe is not due, however, solely to the fact that they had been anticipated. Another important factor is the stimulative effect of the defense program now getting under way. The speed-up of Allied buying here in an effort to avert disaster has also contributed to the support of domestic business in the present crisis.

A sudden termination of the war would, of course, have a seriously disturbing effect upon business in this country for a time, entailing, as it would, readjustment of production schedules. But, whatever lies ahead, we are much better prepared to meet it than we were a short time ago. We have also become less susceptible to the shock of unexpected happenings that ordinarily would create alarm and confusion.

Finland And Hungary

In recognition of Finland's "magnificent credit record" House and Senate passed a resolution giving the Finnish government the option of postponing payment on the debt installment to the United States which fell due yesterday. But Finland, proud of her unique record for fulfilling the obligations assumed under the debt-funding agreement, has chosen to pay promptly despite the devastation caused by the Russian invasion.

While Finnish officials may feel grateful that Congress has thus shown its appreciation, it must be confessed that the offer to postpone payments due in 1940 was by no means an open-handed gesture. The resolution provided, in fact, that the amounts postponed should bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent, with payments to be made in the ten years beginning with 1941.

The niggardly terms of this offer, as well as the general character of the debate, indicates that opposition to any general revision or cancellation of war debts is still extremely strong. Senators voting for the Finnish resolution demanded and received assurances from Senator Vandenberg, who introduced it, that their action would not be considered a precedent for scaling or remitting payments due from other defaulting debtor states.

In view of the terrible events taking place in Europe this adamant adherence to the letter of debt-funding contracts that can never be fulfilled is difficult to understand. However, the question of war-debt revision has little more than academic interest at the moment, so far as the nations involved in the struggle are concerned.

Finland is not, however, in a class by herself as Senator Vandenberg asserts. Rumania has submitted $100,000 as a token of its desire to reach a new agreement on its debt. Hungary, too, has demonstrated its desire to meet payments due the United States. Yesterday Hungary again transmitted a small payment on account of the relief debt contracted in 1920 for flour purchased from the United States Grain Corporation. In making that payment, Hungary also again requested that her proposals for a permanent debt settlement, transmitted over two years ago, shuld be acted upon.

In March 1938 President Roosevelt called attention to Hungary's offer to settle and urged "careful consideration" of its terms by Congress. It has been pointed out that the suspension of payments by Hungary was not connected with defaults by other debtors. It occurred as the result of the panic of 1931, resulting in withdrawals of short-term foreign credits from Hungary which exhausted her exchange reserves and forced suspension of payments.

In 1937 the Hungarian government began to effect settlements with various creditors groups, and since December of that year has regularly transmitted payments to the United States Government. The fact that the payment is small does not excuse the failure of Congress to heed repeated requests from the debtor state to tak cognizance of its proposal for a new contract.

Such inaction is an affront to a friendly nation anxious to regularize its debt commitments. Furthermore, it renders wholly meaningless repeated official assurances that the United States Government is ready to discuss and carefully consider debtor proposals with a view to their eventual submission to Congress.

The Popular Parrot

From the Christian Science Monitor

It appears from a recent story in the London press that there is a great demand in Britain just now for talking parrots—as companions for lonely people. It is odd, if one comes to think of it, that the parrot has not hitherto been more popular in this capacity. True, in order to enjoy his society to the full, and take him outside the house, one must imitate Robinson Crusoe or Long John Silver, and carry him on the shoulder, and no doubt this at present demands a degree of courage. However, a few bold owners would soon establish a recognized, and not unpicturesque, fashion.

Of course, there may be some upon whom Poll's gift of mimicry would pall, who, hearing their own pet phrases and cliches thrown back at them constantly, with that caustic intonation of which the parrot is a master, would feel that instead of a companion they had merely installed a critic on the hearth. But there, perhaps, lies the great virtue of the parrot as a pet; he affords his owner the opportunity for cultivating that rare sense of humor that consists in laughing at oneself.

Rolling It Up

Orient Express: June, 1940

A GUSTY RAIN spattered the windows blurring the blue lights of the platform as the train rolled out of the Gare de Lyon.

"Ten minutes late." The stocky little man smoking a cigaret at the window had pulled out his wafer-thin Swiss watch and was looking at it. "I hear they moved a troop train out just ahead of us."

"Yeah."

"Maybe they'll come over tonight and drop a bomb on that train—"

"Yeah, maybe."

"It looks bad. Maybe this'll all be over in a couple of weeks or so . . ."

"Yeah."

The train was rolling, faster now, along the back ends of monotonous houses where the same man, in shirt sleeves with a pipe in his mouth, stood in window after window watching the train go by. Anyway, he looked like the same man.

"Lumiere, monsieur—" and the conductor, smiling apologetically, lowered the blind on the slanting rain through the window. It was getting too dark to see, anyway. And the dinner gong was sounding.

The dining car was crowded, but the passengers ate hurriedly, talking little, running nervously through the columns of Paris-soir, shaking their heads doubtfully over the communique, stalking away in silence towards their compartments afterwards.

"—I don't care! I don't care who hears me say it! And I hope there's one of those damn Germans right here in this car right now to hear me say it!" The voice was unmistakably Middle Western (American) and angry. Across the aisle and a table forward, a grey haired man with a red face was brandishing his fork at the woman opposite him. His eyes turned my way, caught my eyes and stared hotly and he repeated:

"I don't care who hears me say it! The Germans are swine and I've got to go there and live with them and I'd rather be shot, because—because they're swine! Nothing but swine!"

"Doctor!" shushed his wife. She was a large, capable looking woman with a sharp nose. She raised her left hand and removed the fork from her husband's hand. She turned apologetically.

"Mon mari—" she began, "—ill est tres—"

"Don't mind me. I'm an American."

It was deeply quiet in the dining car after the doctor and his wife had gone. The waiter brought cup after cup of coffee and brandies, whisking away the used cups and ponies, and there was no sound but the rhythmic clicking of the rails and the swish of rain on the windows outside the drawn curtains.

Dijon at midnight was just a blur of blue light and distant shouting far down the platform, a huddle of people inside the dim waiting room, a heap of luggage and a motorcycle leaned against two Army packs and water dripping off the car roof past the window. There was a shrill pipe from up ahead and the train jolted, starting.

At 4 a. m. Vallorbe and the Swiss frontier. The briefest of inspections, a stamp on the passport and the stiff young Swiss frontier guard was gone up the corridor. There was the sound of shunting, a bump, a whistle and the train started again, smoothly, silently. Turn the lights on now. You don't need them, but turn them on. The sun's beginning to make a glow in the sky, but turn on the lights. This is Switzerland now. You can turn on the lights.

At 7 a. m., Lausanne, and the lights still burning. The sun beams into the clean, clean station and people are dumping their luggage through the train windows to the platforms. There is a call for porters. But there are no porters. All the porters are in uniform, on the front somewhere or patrolling some street in some Swiss city. After the parachutes, after the Fifth Column of Holland and Belgium, the Swiss are guarding the rear, too. Even the porters had to go. Everybody had to go. There are soldiers in the station, on the platform, in the restaurant, in the street—young ruddy-faced boys lugging pack and rifle towards an incoming train. The train stops and more soldiers descend, some of them older, much older. One of them must be more than 50. But he steps out smartly. The flaring coal-scuttle Swiss helmet is to big for his head. It bobs a little as he walks.

There's an hour's wait for the train to Bern. Time for breakfast and a stroll up the hill. You can look out on the lake, across the shimmering silvery blue to the snow-peaked Alps in the sunshine. There is sunshine everywhere and the cleanliness of a Dutch garden. A Dutch garden. And here on this telephone post is a Swiss mobilization poster and the Lausanne Tribune gravely discusses the defense of Switzerland against parachutists.

The electric trailway to Bern climbs swiftly into the foothills and through the low passes and the warm sunshine beats through the windows and flashes on the medals of the Swiss officer across the aisle. Marksmanship medals, no doubt. There hasn't been a war to make fine medals for Swiss officers. It takes a war to make real medals.

At Fribourg the train stops briefly and soldiers get on and off. On the platform there are the women. There are always women on the railway platforms in wartime, even when the war is beyond the frontier. Frontiers are nothing when you have parachute troops. Goebbels said that. Or Himmler. The old women seem to stand it better than the young ones. Except for their eyes. The young ones just cry, openly and unashamedly. The old ones almost never cry. It was the same way in France, in Belgium, in Holland, in Prague two years ago, in Spain before that. The old ones fool you, unless you watch their eyes. If you watch their eyes you know it's just the same with them as with the young women. But they know it's no use, crying.

"Wiederseh'n!" The train's going now. The young women follow the train down the platform, holding their men's hands, snatching a last ksis, shouting a last word. The old women stand where they were, looking and half-waving and fumbling at their mouths with their other hand. Don't look at their eyes.

Look at the fields instead, rolling out towards the hills and mountains. Here there's a great pastureland with goats grazing. Over there in the bright sunshine two women are working in a field. Far down a winding roadway there is a troop of Swiss cavalry. There is a sudden crack of a rifle—and another. The train passes a rifle range. Swiss riflemen are shooting. You can see the targets bob 200 yards away across the country.

This is Bern. The capital of Switzerland. The train stops and the people get off at Bern. Very dull, Bern. So they used to say in Paris where it was never dull at all. Here is Bern today it is not dull.

The hotels are crowded with refugees from Basle and the Swiss frontier villages which look out on Germany. The coffee houses and the beer gardens are crowded and in the German language of Bern canton the people discuss the war. There is a deep silence while the radio broadcasts the news reports of three countries. Take your choice. After the news the people drift away again and go on about their business. In the street above the sound of a tram there is the sudden drone of an airplane. Nobody looks up. It is a Swiss patrol plane, overhead all day long.

The shops are gay and brilliant, sausage, cheese, pastries—or watches, shoes, hats and shirts, sportswear and ties—like Vienna used to be, and Prague and Brussels.

RAY BROCK.

"Sailing To Byzantium"

What we are faced with has happened before. Almost 1,500 years ago another great and powerful nation, in composition as heterogeneous as our own, though like us it spoke one language, found itself isolated in a world of furious wars and barbaric dictators. Outside the frontiers civilization and culture died in agony in a couple of generations. The external economic system sustained shocks so savage that men fell back into the bronze age, and it was eight or nine centuries before symptoms of recovery were to be observed. All through that time the isolated nation fought off barbarians, whether to the East or to the West, with varying success, but always with superb courage and ingenuity, maintaining at the same time some appearance of civilization and the entire reality of books.

It was the only country in Europe for hundreds of years where laymen were frequently literate and took pleasure in being so. There is perhaps no spectacle in history more suggestive for us than the millenial protection which the Byzantines provided for the ancient arts and sciences at a time when Charlemagne could not read and when two centuries later a King of England could be nicknamed Beauclerc, because he could write his name.

We are confronted by a not dissimilar condition, which unhappily is not a theory, and are called upon, whatever happens, to perform the function which the Byzantines performed. In the first place we shall almost certainly be compelled to defend our lives and liberty.

Because of our own folly during the last 20 years, we shall have few and weak allies, however willing some of them may be. But we have tremendous resources and the strongest strategic situation of any great nation, though it is to be wished it were ten times stronger. And hence we shall probably be in a position, like the Byzantines, to cherish and preserve what gains men have made since the Renaissance. But it will not do for us to become, as we easily may, men of fixed and stereotyped minds.

Danger stereotypes and sets the mind, and this stereotyping and setting becomes a new and deadlier danger. We face material peril as the Byzantines did at all times, and we also must reckon with spiritual peril, of which they were unaware and which in the end was their destruction, though they never lost courage. It remains to be seen whether we shall develop under stress, making a more satisfactory individual and state as we go or become stiff, static men moving like mechanisms in a hieratic bureaucracy. The second alternative describes pretty well what happened to the Byzantines, and though it took a long time for relays of Turks assisted by Western Europe to capture Constantinople, things move more swiftly nowadays.

It in the isolation, apparently desired by so many of our people who now have their desire, we can preserve independence of mind in such a way as to make it advantageous to the state, we shall have done a braver thing for man than the salvation of culture, greater far than Byzantium's noble service; and the word American will be in no danger, as it seems to be at the moment, of conveying an implication not entirely unlike the implication of the word Byzantine.—Leonard Bacon in the Saturday Review of Literature.

The Post Impressionist

Gissing On The War—

THE OTHER NIGHT, as relief from the world we live in, I was reading the quiet essays of a young man who died in 1903. The collection was "The Private Papers of Henry Ryecroft," and the writer, of course, George Gissing. The book does a great deal to confirm one's belief in the simple, natural human virtues and enjoyments, and is more effective than a romantic movie in persuading even a modern mind to believe that other things than carnage are of value. Or, at any rate, that was the case on this particular evening, and with this particular reader.

Yet if the content of Gissing's mind and the quality of his thought had been expressed only by the calm affirmation of his love of solitude, of reading, of the natural ebb and flow of placid country life, there would have been no temptation to say or do anything further about what I was reading. It would have afforded simply a heartening interlude between the hurly-burly of the day and the day's news, and the sweet oblivion of sleep. And it would have lingered in the memory only as a collection of quaint conceits from a time when men were unaware of the terrible truths that we seem to have learned since the first of the century, and that are being impressed on us with such hideous speed and persistence today.

What made the difference between this casual dismissal of the solace Mr. Gissing has provided for me so many years, or what now seems seasons ago, and my present mood, was the discovery that with all his preoccupation with his gardens, and the rural lanes about his fancied English cottage, he knew as much, and possibly more than most of us know today, about the very same hideous "realities" that absorb most of our waking thoughts. He had, in fact, in his contemplative way, discovered so much about human beings that he had laid out in just as exact a way as Herr Hitler did in "Mein Kampf," the kind of world with which we were to be, and are, confronted. And the only two constituents that he had to consider in order to do this were his knowledge of human nature and his appraisal of "science."

Gissing glances over the past, and forms his conclusions about human nature. It beholds science with a timid and sidelong glance, and believes that he can read the future—with how true a belief the reader may be left to judge.

"Why," he asks, "do I give so much of my time to the reading of history? . . . Many a time I have said to myself that I would close the dreadful record of human life, lay it forever aside, and try to forget it. Somebody declares that history is a manifestation of the triumph of good over evil. The good prevails now and then, no doubt, but how local and transitory is such triumph. If history tomes had a voice, it would sound as one long moan of anguish . . . History is a nightmare of horrors; we relish it, because we love pictures, and because all that man has suffered is to man rich in interest . . . And if anyone soothes himself with the reflection that such outrages can happen no more, that mankind has passed beyond such hideous possibility, he is better acquainted with books than with human nature."

Gissing wrote this in 1903, in a time when, oldsters would have us believe, the world was enjoying a golden age of peace, of invention, of the prospect of infinite felicity. Yet in the midst of his own time he recognized a creeping specter, born of this very era of invention and "progress."

"I hate and fear 'science'," this Victorian said in another of his essays, "because of my conviction that, for a long time to come if not forever, it will be the remorseless enemy of mankind.

"I see it destroying," he wrote, "all simplicity and gentleness of life, all the beauty of the world; I see it restoring barbarism under a mask of civilization; I see it darkening men's minds and hardening their hearts; I see it bringing a time of vast conflicts, which will pale into insignificance 'the thousand wars of old,' and, as likely as not, will whelm all the laborious advances of mankind in blood-drenched chaos.

"Yet," he added, "to rail against it is as idle as to quarrel with any other force of nature . . ."

When Gissing wrote that the automobile was coming over the horizon, but no one had created the armored tank; persons were dreaming about flying, but no one had envisaged the "flying fortress" or "dive bombing;" it was thought a pretty fancy to write of ships that would visit the bottom of the sea, but the submarine was not yet an accomplished fact; the industrial age had been well started, and especially in England the machine had accumulated many slaves, but neither gadgets, babies nor corpses were being turned out in accordance with the principles of "mass production;" and physicists who were inquiring into the nature of matter were a long way from seeking to disintegrate the atom in such a way as to disintegrate at the same time the bodies and dwelling places of their neighbors.

That all this and much more besides has happened since, and that a single gentle essayist who looked with intentness at the world about him was able to sense its coming, simply and solely because he was a thoughtful, well-intentioned and intelligent human being, seems paradoxically, to afford relief. The stubborn idealist is somehow encouraged by it to believe that in spite even of "blitzkrieg," there is something in human nature that may enable it eventually to outwit, as well as to out-see, the machine.

Mischief In Mexico

By Betty Kirk

The Intervention Phobia

Mexico City.

THERE IS one theme song for Nazi and Communist propaganda in Mexico. It is United States intervention. There is one objective desired by these two totalitarian powers. It is United States intervention. The Communazis are working day and night to bring such intervention about and if they can succeed they will have a propaganda banner to be waved over the whole of Latin America, inflaming the already fearful Latin American nations against the "Imperialist" United States.

Playing directly into their hands irresponsible officials and citizens of the United States are talking tough about Mexico. Basing their ideas upon propaganda which could probably be traced directly to the Nazis themselves, they are venting their alarm about conditions below the border, in senseless talk about "cleaning up Mexico," "taking things in hand down there" and even in dreaming of new expeditionary forces to be sent.

Worse yet recurring reports from across the Rio Grande reveal troop concentrations in the Southwestern States, the cancellation of Army leaves for the next few months, and even the building of fortifications on the United States side of the border. Such maneuvers also play directly into the hands of the totalitarian powers, for they give substance to the Mexican fears, always latent, of a repetition of United States invasion here.

THE FIRST AGENCY to report such maneuvers to Mexico is the Transocean News Service, affiliated with D. N. B., which is subsidized by the German government. The first, and only agency, to report here the words of Elliott Roosevelt urging "an adequate protection along the whole Mexican frontier to guard against trouble" was the German agency. The first paper to spread such reports across its front page and to write editorials on the "imperialist" United States, desiring to intervene in Mexico, is El Popular, the labor newspaper which slavishly follows the Communist Party line. Such words and such maneuvers are, it is clear, grist for the Communist propaganda machines, and they are lavishly spread over the whole of Latin America.

This propanganda machine, fed by dupes in the United States, works here in two ways. Its most obvious outlet is through the Mexican press and its own subsidized publications. It has increased at least 100 per cent since the armament program launched in the United States late in May. In the week beginning June 2 a new German daily, Diario Aleman was launched. It is frankly propagandist and is published in Spanish. There is also a continuous whispering campaign carried on by German residents and recently arrived German "salesmen," attacking the democracies and promising Mexico, as Germany did in the last war, the return of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California.

This propaganda serves only to poison the public mind against the United States. The more insidious work of the Communists and Nazis is their constant agitation for trouble here, working within the confused scene provided by the coming presidential elections. Both groups are fomenting trouble in the hopes of inspiring the much-desired United States intervention. Not only the national, but the international situation as well, provides them with a fertile field.

THE THREE top men in Mexico today have openly disowned both Communist and Nazi sympathies. President Lazaro Cardenas has persistently and unrelentingly supported the democratic cause and on June 9 in a continental broadcast to the whole of America said "The peoples of our America have the inescapable duty of maintaining the closest understanding, and building up a single defense front which will save them from all violent or arbitrary intervention by foreign forces which, at any moment, threaten to overthrow the sovereign rights of the American people, united by the profound bonds of their own liberty."

Gen. Manuel Avila Camacho, the presidential candidate supported by the administration, has from the beginning of his campaign militated for closer harmony with the United States and all American nations. Though he is saddled with the support of the Communist Party and of the Confederation of Mexican Labor, with its Communist sympathies and propaganda, there is no doubt that, if elected, Gen. Avila Camacho will throw both overboard in favor of a conservative administration.

Gen. Juan Andreu Almazan, the opposition candidate, has gone even farther. On June 9 at Ciudad, Juarez, Chihuahua, he declared that "The last battle between totalitarianism and democracy will be fought in America. The Mexicans, citizens of a democracy, should be against all tyranny, against all totalitarianism." The following day, when Italy entered the war, he publicly attacked the Hitler regime and predicted that the German people will tire of oppression and overthrow their Nazi overlords.

It is safe to say that at least 90 per the members of the Mexican government and of the official supporters of both Generals Avila Camacho and Almazan are solidly prodemocratic and antitotalitarian. It is upon the remaining 10 per cent or less that the Communist and Nazi agents work. Obviously such a small minority cannot be effective unless, by its inflammatory propaganda in both the United States and Mexico, it can manage to stir up trouble between the two nations.

That they are succeeding to some extent is apparent in the current anti-Mexico press campaign now in full cry in the United States. This is inspired by special interests and "special writers," neither of which is interested in studying the complex and turbulent scene here sufficiently to arrive at the truth. It is much easier to scream "murder" and wait for its effect upon the United States public, now in the full throes of war hysteria.

IT CANNOT be denied that there may be trouble in Mexico, trouble incited by these alien agents behind the screen of the presidential campaign. If such an outbreak occurs, and is allowed to run its normal course, President Lazaro Cardenas, backed by a loyal army, will undoubtedly be able to keep the situation in hand and have it under control within two weeks at the most. But if such trouble should lead to the United States Government taking action in any way, other than maintaining its support of the legitimate government here, it would provide a propaganda torch for the Communazi agents to wave to their heat's content.

An analysis of the true trend of the situation here leads to only one conclusion—that the propaganda campaign conducted by the Communazis on these lines cannot be fought with planes or battleships. The armed invasion of Latin America by Gemany is a myth, as Herr Hitler has realistically declared. It is not an armed invasion that threatens but an economic and political invasion which has been underway for the last five years and which is being pushed to the hilt as the Nazis overrun Europe.

This battle must be fought in kind—with press and trade and the creation of genuine good will, through the channels of diplomacy and cultural relations. And as the new threat to American security grows with totalitarian successes in Europe it is hoped that the State Department and United States Government will realize that it must send Bullitts and Kennedys and Wilsons as its representatives to the south, increase their staffs to the necessary proportions, and supply them with sufficient funds to counteract the poisonous underground attacks which are increasing from day to day. It is no exaggeration to say that one experienced and able ambassador is worth two battleships in Latin America any day.

An adequate and understanding press coverage of Latin America is the most imperative need, and the one which has been most grossly neglected in the past. To every one United States newspaperman sent into the Latin American field 50 have been sent to Europe and to Asia. And the few who are sent here are so burdened with inadequate aid and funds that the best they can do is to send in a routine coverage.

Too often Latin America has been the victim of the "special writer," the fly-by-night "expert" who comes looking for thrills and is in too much haste to find out the facts. Such "special writers" are also often the tools of pressure interests seeking some political reform and hoping to gain it by rousing the United States public concerning the dangers of the governments across the border.

GREAT Steps were made in our relations with Latin America through the sincere application of the Good Neighbor policy. In putting the policy into effect the State Department has established a flawless record, always seeing beyond the immediate economic loss to the great political gain made by noninterference in the internal affairs of Latin American nations. The policy will now be put to the test as the totalitarians campaign invades Latin America and we will find ourselves face to face with either hostile or friendly nations.

Any move made during the present war hysteria to endanger that policy through intervention, or even the threat of it, will be paid for dearly in the tense months to come. That Mexico is the proving ground is apparent to all familiar with the maneuvers going on here. But that if left alone she will settle her own difficulties and that the country will continue to be run as "Mexico for the Meicans" is obvious from the forthright stand on the totalitarian menace taken by President Cardenas, Gen. Avila Camacho and Gen. Almazan.

The Dangers We Face

I have made a survey, talking to dozens of people, housewives, clerks, mechanics, and they were all of the opinion that we should do everything possible to aid the Allies short of man-power. They think the risk of our being involved in the war by giving aid is not to be compared to the dangers we would face if the Allies were defeated.—Lillian Whicker, Indianapolis.

Winner Takes All

Force Alone Could Bar A Victor's Claims in Americas

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The dominant dialect of governments today derives from the imperious vocabulary of force. This lexicon is resorted to by Congress in the resolution extending the definition of our continental doctrine, respect for which by non-American powers is contingent: the validity of the doctrine resides in the force that sustains the Government's fiat.

The three centuries old continental doctrine of Europe is the balance of power, which resembles in no particular the American doctrine except that each is founded in the power of its champion to compel respect. The American doctrine is defensive, and denies equality and justice to none. The European doctrine is fundamentally aggressive, denies equal rights, and presupposes an artificial and enforced, if not a completely imposed inequality among the states of Europe to be a prerequisite to the safety and prosperity of the nation or nations paramount in the continent. A fatal fault of the European doctrine is that any nation possessing the power may constitute itself virtual dictator of the continent for some generations or for a century, only to be challenged at last and possibly to be displaced from its seat of priority. While the American doctrine averts war, the European doctrine invites war.

No regional doctrine, however, can absolutely guarantee continuous peace, and conditions existing today indicate that our doctrine, which possesses no standing in international law, faces a storm.

A hypothetical defeat of France and England suggests a few unpleasant possibilities:

If Germany might compel the cession by England of the British West Indies, of British Guiana and British Honduras, such a contretemps would be intolerable to the United States. The law, however, would be with Germany, as we ourselves recognize the right of conquest by force.

No man knows if Germany would desire to retain such acquisitions. The Nazi government might place them in the market, and acquire a price for them that would finance a future war. Or Germany might endeavor to "liberate" them, and, filling them with Germans, constitute herself their "protector," an act that the United States must deem to be impermissible. Here would arise a situation justifying the employment of force by the United States to prevent the realization of a right recognized by the laws of war.

By acquiring French West African possessions, opposite Latin America, Germany would be nearer to Brazil than is the United States, and with the acquisition of French Guiana, might claim a right from geographical position to participate in the determination of the destinies of Latin-American nations, pretending that the relations of the United States with Liberia in Africa, a continent that is mostly Europe's, are the sort of relations that Germany would establish in the Americas.

The Philippine Islands were acquired by right of conquest; this fact illustrates the legitimacy and validity of such a tide in international law. If Germany might obtain such a title from France or England, and her right were disputed by the United States, America's only resort, excepting war, would be arbitration, and any arbitral court would be compelled to decide against the United States, sustaining the title obtained by force. It would seem that America's "neutrality," which is a legislated retreat from the Nation's duty and a legislative suspension of America's rights, is assisting Germany to obtain such a title to territories in the Americas.

When Russia and Napoleon realized that their territories in the continent could not be maintained against the forces of the British crown, their possessions here were sacrificed to the United States. France and England might find now in the United States an eager purchaser of their possessions in Latin America at a price that would not be a sacrifice. Some of them are so situated as to be of vital concern to the United States, and England might not at any future time receive for them a fraction of what they could command from America at this instant, when any purchase price would be partly in the nature of a lessening of the cost of the war to the British commonwealth of nations. EDWARD CONN.

"Keep Out"

I wish to inform you that I am strongly opposed to any action on the part of our Government which would bring us into the war going on in Europe today. I have the utmost confidence in the policy of your newspaper and feel certain that I express the wish of all human-minded citizens of this great democracy of ours when I say "Keep America Out of War."—Hopkin Jacob, Washington.

Excerpts From Our Letters

Congress' Duties

Let Congress get busy and take over the duties entrusted to it by the people of the United States. For the seven years of the New Deal they have allowed Roosevelt to take over its powers. We have allowed him to spend and waste the Nation into bankruptcy—and lull the people to sleep with an unsound and unwholesome philosophy. He has meddled into the affairs of other nations—and between nations. He has talked about the "good neighbor" policy—and yet when we are awakened to the fact that we must prepare to protect our own people and our Nation—we find that we have absolutely nothing but a depleted Treasury. Facing this fact—and sensing the unrest of the American people over this — he begins to play ball with European powers to save his neck.—Mrs. E. C. Cooksey, Arlington, Va.

Be Practical

If it seems expedient for our own ultimate safety and good that we should extend assistance to England and France, let's be a little more practical minded this time than last. Let's require that both countries make an honest effort to settle their present obligations to this country. Although they could have made payments in cash at one time if they had so desired, it is no doubt out of the question now. Therefore let them pay with certain of their possessions in the Western Hemisphere that would be of value to us in the way of national defense.—Boyd M. Beagle, Sayre, Pa.

Need for Sacrifice

May I be permitted to comment on just one sentence of the letter by Amos Ackerman in The Post of June 7? He says, "Americans want peace and security, not war, disease, starvation and death." Of course we do—but how much do we want them? Enough to face fearlessly and clearsightedly the dire menace now confronting them? Enough to forget our selfish personal affairs and make the same sort of sacrifices our forefathers made to win our right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness?"—Rose Norris Ferguson, Washington.

To Interventionists

Now is the time for all good idealistic interventionists to exhibit the courage of their convictions and voluntarily go over to fight, bleed and die for the cause which they so vehemently espouse. Of course, the first persons to embark should be those nature-faking politicians who are doing all the speechmaking and public writing about the "civilization that we are bound to save."—Edward J. T. McCullough, Arlington, Va.

The Speediest Manner

Just one more Munich! We wonder what Senator Pittman means by "short of war." Does he not know that the overwhelming majority of Americans want to defend their liberties in every way possible and in the speediest manner? Everyone agrees that Hitler must be defeated. If this can be done in Europe, how infinitely better than doing it over here.—William L. Altman, Washington.

Calls for Action

In the name of God, and Christianity, will our Government sell out the Allies and America to Hitler and Mussolini? Will the people here in the United States who are real Americans allow this to go on?—D. C. Murphy, Brookline, Mass.

No New A. E. F.

In the midst of wild imaginings and hysterical alarms it was relief to read in Harlan Miller's column this morning the statement that the clearer thinkers of those in official positions here have accepted the fact that in present conditions abroad to even consider the possibility of sending an American Expeditionary Force overseas, as we did in 1917, would be most preposterous nonsense. For no matter how great one's abhorrence of Hitler and accomplices, the simple fact remains that our intervention has become an impossibility, because there are no seaports at which troops could be landed.—Theresa H. Russell, Washington.

Who Would Fight?

A veteran of the last World War has told me that he doesn't want to do the fighting this time, but will leave it to others. And, in the next breath, he rushed on to say that America's only means of preserving her democracy was by rushing troops over to fight Hitler now. It's been rather obvious to me that the loudest champions of our immediate entrance into the war are those who for some reasons are not eligible (age, in particular) or else have no sons or husbands to lose.—George S. Miles, Washington.

Backs Roosevelt

We have a great man in the White House. He is not afraid of anything or anybody. So in the present world crisis, let's adjourn politics and petty differences and rally to the support of our leader. Capital, labor, and the man in the street should now act as one. With all due regard to Mr. Farley and Mr. Hamilton, the coming political conventions will be a useless expenditure of money and should be canceled.—Michael Heist, Washington.

When We Are Ready

A great many people are demanding that we enter the war immediately. This is impossible because we are not equipped to fight at present. When we are ready, we will strike with a powerful blow and blast the opponents off the map forever.—Mrs. C. Moore, Forest Glen, Md.

"Idiotic Reasons"

One of the silliest reasons for hating the Germans was submitted to me yesterday and that was that the Germans tell who should and should not have babies. It seems surprising what a variety of idiotic reasons are put forward as reasons that the Germans are terrible. With our insane institutions and penitentiaries full of men and women, it is surprising America never thought of that before.—Veteran, Washington.

Veteran's Challenge

The Post of June 10 carries a story and picture stating 30 heroic Americans have signed a petition for war against Germany. I wonder if each of these 30 brave Americans will carry a copy of this petition to 30 mothers of 20-year-old boys and ask them to sign.—World War Veteran, Washington.

The "Oldsters"

According to press, Aubrey Williams advised the youth of America not to take advice from anyone over 40 years of age. Then why does our elected Presidential servant quote, when convenient, such "oldsters" as Patrick Henry, McCauley and Thomas Jefferson?—M. M. Gordon, Washington.

Our Danes

They Have Contributed Much To United States

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Denmark has never had any great political upheavals, any serious outbreaks of religious persecution, nor have overcrowded conditions inside its boundaries ever compelled its population to mass-emigrate in order to find existence somewhere else. For these reasons the emigration from Denmark to America has always been more or less individual and has nationally been almost unnoticed in American history. Nevertheless, if one takes the pains to dig deep into American history he will find that the "Danish Heritage" compares favorably with that of any other nationality.

To illustrate this statement, it may be mentioned that Jonas Bronck, whose name is commemorated in Bronx Borough of New York City, although his life's work took place in the picturesque New Netherland colonization, was the son of a Danish parson on the Faeroes Islands and a graduate of the University of Copenhagen. So also was Jochiem Pieterszen Kuyter, who in 1651, with Governor Pieter Stuyvesant as a partner, built the town of Harlem on his large tract of land on upper Manhattan, a Dane who for 12 years had been a captain in the Danish Navy. It can also be mentioned that Andries Draeyer, the young "Dutch" naval officer who in 1673, after the Dutch recapture of New Netherland, was made military commander at Fort Nassau, was the same Admiral Andreas Dreyer who some years later was hailed as a navel hero in his homeland—Denmark.

There could be pointed out a vast number of such individuals to prove that the Danes have been active in America for almost as far back as the time of Columbus. But it would carry too far. Instead I will focus upon the time when this great country was struggling side by side with the fathers of our country.

At that time Denmark included among its colonial possessions the Virgin Islands which, because of the very fact that Denmark had been able to retain its neutrality during the prolonged European and American wars, had acquired enormous riches, being the only neutral transit port in the Western Hemisphere. In all cities and towns on both the southern and northern mainland there were Danes representing the rich Danish West Indian interests.

It so happened that a young Dane from St. Thomas, Hans Christian Febiger, was in Boston at the time of the midnight call of Paul Revere, and without hesitation he responded to the call. He fought for the United States at Bunker Hill, and he was still fighting in the last victorious battle at Yorktown. At that time he had advanced to the rank of a general in Washington's army and was commonly known by the nickname "Old Denmark." A painting of him hangs in the Hall of Independence. He died as Treasurer of Pennsylvania and honorary captain of the First Troop of Philadelphia City Cavalry.

This troop was formed in 1774 as the first company of volunteer cavalry organized in Pennsylvania, and its founder and first captain was the Danish West Indian, Abram Markoe, who in 1770 had settled in Philadelphia representing rich family interests on his native island, St. Croix. He presented his troop with a banner on which—for the very first time—the 13 original States were symbolized by 13 alternate stripes—as on the present-day Stars and Stripes of our beloved country.

Before passing over this interesting historical period, I should like to mention just one more name, although not Danish, namely that of Alexander Hamilton. His mother was a Danish subject, and as a boy Alexander Hamilton lived on St. Croix, where he also had his training in the mercantile house of Nicholas Cruyger. While thus employed in 1772 the young man—at that time 16 years old—wrote an article on a most devastating hurricane in the Caribbean. It was this piece of literary work, published in the Royal Dutch American Gazette, October 3, 1772, which convinced his relatives and friends that he deserved a higher education, and incidentally brought him to the United States.

Looking over what I have written so far on Danish participation in early American history, I notice with some dismay how the present conditions in Europe have worked on my mind and made me think, perhaps, more of military than other achievements which are really characteristic of the Danes. I was even at the point of picking a few of the most outstanding of the more than 500 names of Danish-born Americans who gave their lives for their adopted country during the World War.

A Fugitive's Tale

By J. Van Jongh

The "Pacification" Of Holland

I AM ONE of the few Dutchmen who have escaped from Nazi-occupied Holland. I saw the Germans march in triumph through the streets of Amsterdam, standing among my silent, sullen compatriots. I saw the Gestapo arrive, riding in luxury motorcars in the wake of the conquering army.

My name was on the Gestapo lists found on captured German officers. Like hundreds of my countrymen, I was marked down for "liquidation." So when I saw the Germans goose-stepping through the streets I made one quick decision: I would not go near my home or my office.

For days I hid where I could, making the arrangements which have resulted in bringing me to safety in London. Many of my friends had been "liquidated" before I left Amsterdam. Some of them were captured by the fifth columnists and handed over when the Germans marched in. Nearly all have faced the firing squads.

CHIEF AMONG the enemies of Germany were those Dutch traders who refused to swerve from the national principle of neutrality. Despite every intimidation they would not export to Germany goods they had imported under promise that they were for Holland only. Other traders helped the Allies wherever possible. All were on the Gestapo black list. Two Dutch representatives of a British engineering firm have vanished. Unlike myself, they maintained their normal daily routine.

I happened to be across the road from their office in the center of Amsterdam when members of the Gestapo came to take them away in a car.

Their business rival, representative of a German engineering firm, had arranged that they should be suitably "attended to," as "Nazi enemies;" he accompanied the Gestapo to identify the two men.

ARTHUR SEYSS-INQUART
Nazi Governor of Holland

A crowd quickly gathered as the men were led out, and the position looked menacing for the Germans. But the Gestapo men drew their revolvers, drove the crowd back and declared that the men were being taken merely for "interrogation."

One of the crowd threatened to "get" the fifth columnist; he was pushed into the Gestapo car. Not one of the three has been heard of since.

A BUSINESS FRIEND, a staunch friend of England, had done Britain good service. He had warned the British authorities in Holland about a number of cases in which fifth column exporters were falsifying documents and generally misrepresenting German goods with the object of obtaining for them a certificate showing them to be of Dutch origin; in this way the exporter hoped to beat the British embargo on German exports.

This man was one of the first to be "attended to" by the Gestapo. He was picked up in the early hours of one morning. Next day his wife was offered his "remains" for 1,000 guilders. Officially he was an air raid casualty. Another friend of mine was the leader of the stevedores' union. When the pro-Nazis were reexporting goods to Germany in defiance of the neurality rules, my friend instructed the men of his union not to handle the stuff. They came out on strike to show their determination not to help the Nazis.

This leader was marked down as an enemy of Germany. He, too, has disappeared.

NAZI VENGEANCE continues in its full brutality. As soon as the Gestapo had finished with those who had been anti-Nazi before the occupation, they turned their attention to those who might possibly be thought capable at some future time of sabotage or of attempting to reawaken the spirit of the Dutch people. Hundreds more Dutchmen vanished.

I shall never forget the drama I saw in a bomb-scarred residential district in South Amsterdam. The Gestapo had called to arrest a journalist, some of whose blood was Jewish.

On her knees on the pavement was his fair-haired wife, tears streaming down her cheeks, begging the Nazis to let her husband go. Roughly they pushed her aside. They took her husband away. Daily the number of suicides mounted up in scores.

Some of these were refugees who had escaped from concentration camps in Germany. Some were Germans who had been anti-Nazis of long standing.

All knew what their fate would be should they fall into the hands of the Nazis. They chose death rather than the torture of the concentration camp. Everywhere the Dutch people are being pressed into the service of their captors. Any show of unwillingness or active demonstration of nationalist feelings mean the concentration camp. What stores were left intact in the Rotterdam and Amsterdam treasure houses have been rifled by the Germans. These, when the invaders came, were stocked with petroleum, edible oils, dairy produce, bullion and other merchandise. It gives me a thrill of exultant pleasure when I read that the R. A. F. are bombing these stolen oil tanks.

THE DUTCH people, who hitherto lived comfortable on the produce of their country and Empire, have been forced already to draw in their belts. Before I escaped food and clothes were being rationed in this latest annex to the Third Reich.

But the Dutch are not sitting still and meekly suffering this arrogant Prussianism. They have found a way to deal with it, especially at The Hague. In Amsterdam reprisal has not been so marked.

The Dutchman, jostled off (and I have been even ordered off) the narrow pavements by a swaggering Nazi lout, bears the incident with dignity and apparent fortitude. But at night the black-out provides opportunity for the squaring of accounts.

It is surprising how many of the conquerors receive a wetting as the result of a ducking in one of the canals.

Carousing Nazis, staggering from the cafes under a load of liquor, were given a stealthy shove into the water. I myself accounted for two by such well-timed pushes during the short time that I was under Nazi domination. I did not hear of any Dutchman being caught-out at "shove and run." Among certain sections of the oppressed Dutch it became a point of honor not to let any insult go unatoned. But the Nazis became wary. The Fuehrer's troops are now punished if they are discovered returning to billets in a soaked condition.

THESE EXPLOITS, however, are but the passing event of the bursting hatred the Dutch bear their oppressors. Hitler's heel is on their necks.

Here is something my experience in Holland taught me: You never know who is a fifth columnist; these traitors work in secret. One man I knew in Amsterdam was an influential and titled business man. I always regarded him as a patriotic Dutchman. Until the Nazis were bombarding Rotterdam. Then he said to me: "I cannot help thinking Holland would be better off under Nazi protection." A few hours later he was killed by a Nazi bomb.

Prophet's Words

A paragraph in your editorial column this morning states, "We don't know what the world needs, but whatever it is, it needs a lot of it and urgently." The prophet Micah stated it thousands of years ago: "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with they God."—J. M. W., Washington.

Bouquet for Pepper

We can be deeply thankful that we have a man like Senator Claude Pepper in our Congress. A man with the courage and foresight of a real American and a true Christian, who does not shame his countrymen by fearing to offend Hitler and his followers who have broken every law of man and God.—J. E. W., Washington.

THEY GAVE THEM GUNS

By David Stuart Wauters

They gave them guns; e'en taught them triggering
And tip'd their weapons with a biting flame
Of steel to pierce, without reward of shame,
High beating hearts, that lack'd all savaging;
We taught them hateful battle hymns, to sing
Above high mercy-prompting, in the game
With death's demanding low defaming frame
For portraiture of mind's sure cowarding.
They brought back guns—guns that had done their work
Only too well, by young eyes aim'd to kill
Strange foes they could not even see to hate,
Strange lives that dwelt beyond the battled mark
Of racial misconception—feeding swill
To death-swine, gulping all the dregs of fate

A WEEK-END REVIEW OF CURRENT PUBLICATIONS

Saint And Satan

By John W. Chase

CAN SATAN himself appear in person to seduce the humbly devout? Can any one, thus defield, hope thereafter to remain in God's grace? Is Satan's power to insinuate doubt, thus leading to self-destruction, his most subtle weapon? Such questions, which in modern times have mostly been relegated to the dust-bin of superstition, are presented as powerful, up-to-date problems by the skillful pen of Georges Bernanos in "The Star of Satan."

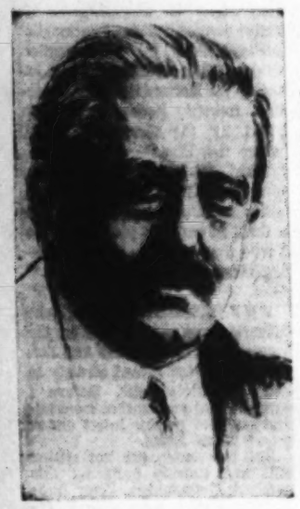
This novel shows M. Georges Bernanos at his mysterious best, the apparently simple author writing of the struggles of a simple peasant-priest in rural parishes. We seem to have met a Father Donassin before; and we have met, too, his various superiors representing different schools of thought in the Church. But in "The Star of Satan." Mr. Bernanos heightens his story with human conflicts and physical incidents that are likely to entice the reader, even one who cares not for the plumbing of mystic depths.

The paradox of Father Donassin, the rustic saint who has allowed Satan to enter into his body, is summed up briefly: "For this strange man, onto whom so many others unloaded their griefs, like so many burdens, was gifted with the genius of consolation and yet himself could never be comforted." Such a thesis is not in itself remarkable. But Mr. Bernanos has made an overpowering story of it.

THE OPENING section of "The Star of Satan," "The Story of Mouchette," comes as a surprise, and the unwary reader might easily be deceived into thinking he was embarking on a slightly risque French novel.

Mouchette, the seductive young girl, is a lively creation, the problem-child of Campagne, and yet we cannot altogether despise her, even when she nonchalantly blows the head off her first lover—it is not till much later that we find any symbolism in this act. Her second affair, with the local doctor and socialist leader, is more scabrous, perhaps, but one still wishes her well. True, the author apparently does not share this view:

"As much by delight in evil as love of danger, she had turned this absurd puppet of a man into a poisonous beast, known to herself alone, fostered by herself, a creature not unlike the specters that haunt adolescent ice, and now she cherished it as the image and symbol of her own degradation."



GEORGES BERNANOS

Author of "The Star of Satan"

With section two, "The Temptation of Despair," we abruptly leave the vivid narrative of Mouchette and plunge into the story of Father Donassin, a young, gangling curate, with a wretched seminary record, disliked by the archdeacon, unwanted by any priest. To his rescue comes the Canon of Campagne, Father Menou-Segrais, a tolerant old priest, apparently indolent, but with an extraordinary depth of wisdom, accepting the fumbling curate more as penance to himself than in hope of having a pleasant companion.

It is not long before the canon discovers the horrible flagellations his curate is addicted to, and in a tense scene we watch the kindly, shrewd old man attempt to bring reason to the humble priest. But despair still lies in Father Donassin's heart, the excruciating self-torture continues, despite Father Menou-Segrais' excellent reasoning—reasoning become less convincing, perhaps, as the good father realizes he may have a saint on his hands.

The great climax of "The Star of Satan" comes when Father Donassin, apparently lost in the woods at nightime, meets Satan, at first disguised as a cheerful horse-trader. It is quite impossible to recreate the terrific madness, mysticism, realism of this scene, reaching its wild climax when Satan physically breathes himself into the body of the bedazed priest. When dawn comes, the trembling priest starts his homeward journey and, meeting a laborer on the road, discovers that he can now read the souls of all persons.

He first empolys these powers on Mouchette, whom he meets in a forest, begging this victim of the devil to return to God. The girl rushes home, now practically witless, to commit the crime Satan most loves: "Though she longed to do so, she did not slash quickly; she set the blade fiercely and coldly to her throat and heard it rasp into her flesh. The last thing of which she was conscious was the trickle of warm blood over her hand and down into the crook of her arm."

Mouchette's suicide temporarily unhinges Father Donassin's mind and in the final section, "The Saint of Lumbres," we discover him installed as priest in the isolated mountain town of Lumbres. Already thousands of pilgrims journey to the confessional of this peasant-priest and soon there are rumors of miracles. Yet when the priest realizes that he has not followed an inward voice of God to produce a great miracle, to raise a boy from the dead, he slowly sinks into abject misery. The sudden, powerful ending, introducing of all persons an Anatole France better portrayed here than in many books of memoirs, must, in all fairness, be left to the reader.

THIS NOVEL was first published in France as long ago as 1926, and it established Bernanos' already growing position as one of the leading writers in a group that included Maritain, Bloy and Mauriac. These men in no sense represent a clique, but in common they have fought their way back to a faith that they had lost in the tortuous by-paths of eighteenth and nineteenth century French philosophical "liberalism."

That this fight has been grim is shown by the almost frightened intensity of their work which, at one time sneered at by post-war Frenchmen, is now creating a growing school of thought in that country. To those readers who wish to understand fully the nature of Bernanos' contribution, "The Star of Satan" can be highly recommended; to those who cannot read a novel that requires any intellectual activity, the book may be boring in spots, but skipping will strip the novel of its great underlying implications.

A word must be added about the translation, which can only be described as less than mediocre. At times the entire sense of the original has been changed by omission or misunderstanding. Example after example shows the loss of power of the French text and, in the case of a subtle writer like Bernanos, this sometimes makes mere nonsense in the English translation.

Jesse Stuart As Novelist

"TREES OF HEAVEN," by Jesse Stuart. (Dutton, $2.50.)

MUCH REGIONAL fiction turns out to be merely the efforts of an author to depict quaint people. There is nothing of that about Jesse Stuarts' either in his poetry, "The Man With the Bull Tongue Plow," or in this, his first novel.

"Trees of Heaven" is the story of the struggle between two ways of life; the meagre, hard thrift of Anse Bushman who lived to bring the land under the plow and the shiftless carefree existence of Bolliver Tussie, son of a long line of squatters.

After the timber was cleared, Anse bought the land and offered Bolliver the choice between getting off the land where his family had squatted for generations or going to work to make a crop. For a while it seemed that Bolliver and his family had become good tenant farmers but the old way of life was too strong and making moonshine, getting drunk, frolicking and having babies continued in spite of the signed agreement against them. Bolliver was put off the land after a bitter lawsuit, but instead of the feud which naturally follows that kind of lawsuit in the mountains, Anse suffered an accident which gave him a look into hell so he sent for Bolliver to come back to the land.

So Anse settles his quarrel and the blood of the two families was united. Meanwhile the quarrel between the two ways of life goes on.

To sketch the plot of "Trees of Heaven" is to realize that much of its worth lies in the beauty of the deeply etched scenes of everyday life; hog butchering, lambing time, the square dance, the land sale at the county seat and the spring plowing. Through it all runs a deep sense of love of the land and the love of life itself and a conviction that life is essentially good which gives this novel a quality rare in modern fiction.

"They loved the earth and the smells of the spring earthwind, clean and sweet to smell with the flowers of spring . . . What were laws to them? The laws of nature were their laws. They lived hard and they loved it because life was sweet to them. Now they are dust under the trees of Heaven and the strings on their fiddle are mute and cold and the toes that stepped briskly on the puncheon floor do not dance.

"But there's a whole lot left—The bright August wind is good to breathe from the green growing life that covers the earth—this earth among the hills where life stirs at night and where there is music, work, fight, growth, sleep and dark, and where there will be the winy sunlight coming again tomorrow."

Deadly Sins Of The 'Realists'

The Blind Stateman Who Led A Blind World To Ruin

"Not Hitler's Genius But Our Confusion" Wrought This Horror

By Albert Guerard.

WALTER MILLIS provides what we so desperately need: a mind that is clear, fearless and free. For the last 20 years there has been on all sides a panic flight from honest thinking. Traditions, phobias, class interests, party allegiance have befuddled our reason and warped our conscience.

Worst of the distorting elements were a cynical pose masquerading as "realism" and the insidious propaganda that clamors loudest against propaganda. In such a chaos those who, crudely and fanatically, know what they want are the masters, like gangsters in a frightened mob. Hitler's might is the measure not of his genius but of our confusion.

The test of Walter Millis's honesty is the very fact that this book is so different in tone and spirit, from his "Road to War." Mr. Millis is no Bourbon, although a Southerner; he can forget, and he can learn. He entered active life 20 years ago in the katzenjammer morrow of the lesser World War. He was one of the lost generation. No wonder he saw in "the martial spirit," under a pretense of ideal purpose, little but a welter of jingoism, profiteering and ballyhoo.

These elements, egregious in 1898, were present in 1917, as they will be present at Armageddon and on Judgment Day. But he failed to realize that the proportions may change. Wilson's crusade, entered upon with the greatest reluctance after three years of open debate and reflection, was radically different from the hysterical flare of two decades before. In 1917 propaganda and racketeering were the parasites, not the prime movers, of America's resolve.

There is no trace of the old weary cynicism in this swift and compelling narrative. Obviously, the evil lies far deeper than the tricks of rabble rousers. Hitler gave in "Mein Kampf" a masterly manual of ballyhoo; but it never is ballyhoo alone that drives men to kill and be killed. Nor is it personal gain; what shall it profit a man to win for his country all the oil in the world if he is to die torn and charred in exploding tank or burning plane? Both sides knew war better than we and dreaded it more. Both sides were as convinced as Norman Angell himself that war never pays. Mr. Millis takes a truly realistic view of the conflict, for realism consists in looking beyond material interests. The struggle is not for gold or steel; it is not even a contest between ideologies. It is a religious war, fought in the name of ancient idols and lying prophets, with the fierceness of all religious wars.

MR. MILLIS'S BOOK is simplicity itself. It does not study remote causes. It offers, he modestly says, "no contribution to history." It does not claim to give us inside dope. It does not dwell on dramatic personalities or lurid incidents for their sheer picturesque value. It attempts nothing more than to present a narrative of the last 21 years. The breathless interest of the work lies not in tricks of construction or style but in the facts themselves, aptly chosen and simply told.

GUSTAV STRESMANN

"His duplicity killed Briand's dream"

I do not see how the story could have been made more lucid. I do not see either how it could have been more fairly presented. A brilliant young man, 20 years hence, may denounce this book as propaganda, rousing the martial spirit, paving the road to war. And he will not be wholly wrong. Facts are the most irresistible of propagandists; and the facts marshalled by Walter Millis do not lead us to think that a world under Nazi rule would be sane and happy.

ON ONE POINT only I would challenge the accuracy of Mr. Millis's information. He states, not once but four times, that the Allies forbade "forever" the union of Austria with Germany. Both the treaty of Versailles (Art. 80) and the treaty of St. Germain (Art. 88) declared Austria's independence to be "inalienable," "except with the consent of the Council of the League of Nations." A peace-minded Germany might have secured that consent, long before 1938, from such leaders as Briand, Herriot or Blum.

But the curse of the Weimar Republic was that it could not make up its mind. It had deposed the Kaiser, yet it extolled the spirit that was Kaiserism. It idolized Hindenburg. With Stresemann it was given to finassieren; when Stresemann's duplicity was revealed it killed Briand politically and Briand's dream. The pocket battleships, the surreptitious Anschluss in the guise of a customs union were attempts to get around the treaties rather than to amend them. The right policy would have been to ask, in the name of the Fourteen Points and the Covenant, that the treaties be fulfilled generously, in spirit and in truth. But Article 19 never was honestly invoked.

IT IS UNGENEROUS to kick the fallen; yet the historian may have to do so, for defeat and death are no excuse. Mr. Millis lets Poland off too leniently. Nothing could be worse than the Pilsudski spirit. "The Father of Modern Poland" wanted to restore the old Polish imperium, with Lithuania and the Ukraine. The Poles denied the Ruthenians the autonomy which had been solemnly promised by treaty. They constantly bullied Lithuania. When Czecho-Slovakia was threatened they placed every obstacle in the way of Russian support; when Czecho-Slovakia was dismembered they were found among Germany's jackals. Poland, I firmly believe, must revive. But not that Poland.

There is an essential point which appears in Walter Millis's pages with no lack of definiteness, yet I wish he had emphasized it even more. It is that the fate of central and western Europe was determined by factors beyond the confines of that tragic area. Anschluss, Corridor, Sudeten were causes of irritation; but, in a healthy world, they would not have led to Hitlerism and war. Mr. Millis, in agreement with Thomas Mann, states that the Versailles settlement was a precarious but workable compromise.

What killed its chances was the fact that we Americans, who inspired it, refused to lend our full moral and material support to its application. Our Senate chose isolation. And Europe was left bewildered and divided, without an arbiter, without a guide.

Mr. Millis makes it plain that, in spite of Versailles and the Ruhr, Europe had managed to overcome the bitterness and chaos of 1919. Locarno was a great victory, and at that time Hitler was a laughing stock. The rise of Nazism and the present war are the fruit of the economic crisis which began in America in 1929. Material factors alone do not actually cause war, but they weaken the resistance of national organisms to the viruses of hatred and fear.

IF THERE had been no depression, then, would there have been no war? "It is probably a useless question," Walter Millis sanely remarks, "because the depression really grew out of the kind of world which had been put together after the Great War. To have had no depression, it would have been necessary to put together a different kind of world . . . It is hard not to believe that something better than still another great war might have come. However, that may be, with the coming of the depression the whole scene changed."

The mistakes, stupidities and selfishnesses of other people played their part in promoting the rise in Germany of an extreme, savage and warlike government; and, as Mr. Millis concludes with his almost exasperatingly judical sense of balance, "no one can ever finally say just what 'caused' anything in history or who was most responsible, for that is something on which every one must make up his own mind for himself in the end."

Finally Mr. Millis shows that European policies, since 1917, have been dominated by the dread of Bolshevism. Clemenceau himself called a sudden halt to democratic propaganda in Germany for fear it would lead beyond the bourgeois parliamentary ideal. Right up to Munich the conservative leaders in England and France were all for Hitler, Mussolini, Franco, against their own Leftists, against Litvinoff.

The masses were on the other side. In the Ethiopian imbroglio, in the Spanish civil war, in the betrayal of Czecho-Slovakia the governments, according to Walter Millis, did lip service to international justice, democracy and the League; but with a realistic wink to reassure the aggressors. Maurras wanted to have Blum murdered, while Flandin sent his congratulations to Hitler.

The British and French tories did not resolve to fight until they had abandoned every principle, every ally and every strategic point. For these divided counsels, insincerities and clumsy cleverness, the Allies are now paying with their lifeblood.

These are not Walter Millis's words but my own: in a brief review, I am bound to condense and overemphasize. Mr. Millis retains to the end the dispassionate lucidity which makes his narrative so valuable. Dispassionate, but not cold; no one could be cold in these days except the dead.

"WHY EUROPE FIGHTS," by Walter Willis. (Morrow, $2.50.)

Twilight Of The Popular Front

By Daniel Gallagher.

WRITING a history of the immediate past is always a project that calls for considerable hardihood. For one thing there are too many still on hand who remember the events recorded for the author to proceed with that easy omniscience which critics of more distant eras are able to assume toward the problems which so confused the generation that faced them. When the period he interprets is one darkened by great adversities, as in the two decades just ended, it will be doubly advisable to walk with caution.

But even a year ago a book like "The Fat Years and The Lean" might have been reasonably sure of a respectful reception. Bruce Minton and John Stuart, though they recite the tribulations of the past ten years in full detail, do so without that triumphant relish which makes the work of so many Communist critics rather difficult to endure; their comment on the sins and stupidities of big-wigs and brass-hats is caustic but restrained. Indeed, they seem to feel that a simple chronicle of the events of the past two decades is enough in itself to illustarte their thesis on the iniquity of the existing order.

As a matter of fact the Communist is on firm ground so long as he confines his criticism to the failures of the capitalist system. He has only to point to the nearest breadline to prove his case. It is not until he begins to explain how matters will be better by taking control of property out of the hands of the plutocrats and turning it over to the politicians that he begins to run into difficulties. And because Communists in this country refrained from elaborating upon their own doctrine and missed no opportunity to point indignantly at existing abominations their movement, for a long while, anyhow, succeded in disguising itself as a simple crusade for social improvement. If their methods (and their manners) were not always right at least the things they were attacking were generally wrong.

Indeed, a great many Americans seemed inclined, not so long ago, to extend this aura of idealism even to communism abroad. When it was explained how much more democratically things were managed in Russia than in the capitalistic countries (much as Mr. Minton and Mr. Stuart explain it here) there were few to demur. The somewhat drastic methods employed by the ruling heirarchy were laid to their holy hunger and thirst for justice—an excess of zeal like that of the Roundheads in the English Revolution or The Mountain in the French. Perhaps a little violence was inescapable in the establishment of the proletarian Cockaigne.

And even those who were a bit doubtful about democracy a la Russe were forced to admit that the Soviets stood foursquare against the enemies of representative government. Nowhere was the spinelessness of the resistance to Fascism mocked so mercilessly as in the sermons M. Litvinov used to deliver to the capitalistic powers at Geneva, nowhere was imperialism condemned more sternly than in the encyclicals of M. Stalin.

But the events of the past twelvemonth have been a little disillusioning. After listening so long to the story of Russias devotion to democracy it was something of a shock to hear of her hedge-marriage to the Reich. The authors make a valiant effort to synthesize the old and new versions of Russian foreign policy, but it demands a thorough course in party dialectic to follow the reasoning which proves the present war a ruse of the capitalist powers (including the United States) to destroy popular government there. Most of us, I am afraid, will be unable to cast ourselves into the stream of their enthusiasm for the manner in which the blessings of liberty were brought to downtrodden Pole and Finn. Indeed, I suspect that a great many Americans these days are tempted to lump communism in with naziism; it is rather difficult to see at first glance much difference between the humanitarianism of Russia and the imperialism of the Reich. Anyhow the time is hardly favorable to impress us with the idealism that inspires all who bear the message of Marx.

"THE FAT YEARS AND THE LEAN," by Bruce Minton and John Stuart. (Modern Age Books, $3.75.)

Spiritual Guide

"THIS WAY TO HEAVEN," by Paul Hanley Furfey. (Preservation Press, $2.)

This is a book, written by a Catholic priest and teacher, primarily for Catholic readers, but any Protestant who could read this book thoroughly without profit to his own soul, would certainly be a long way off from the Kingdom of God.

It is a book on the Spiritual Life—and God knows such books are too few—"written for people who desire to strive for a high standard of perfection while living in the world." The author is humbly conscious of the difficulty of writing such a book, but witnesses to the proof of its practical suggestions in his own experience of 17 years in the priesthood. How adequately he has succeeded in his efforts can only be attested by an honest reading of his pages. So thoroughly was I fascinated with this book from the outset, that I actually finished it before putting it down, and that is a rare experience for me.

Of course it is a Catholic book with specific instructions for the practice of Catholic liturgy and worship, but that it breathes on every pages a consecrated devotion to a Christ-like way of living.

The last chapter certainly applies to Protestants as well as to Catholics. Any Christian who reads that chapter will get a picture of himself and it will surely do him good to identify himself. Every Christian, Catholic or Protestant, needs to hear again "The New Commandment," needs to keep himself "Walking in Love," and needs continually to do "The Works of Mercy." This book will help him to meet those needs as he ought to do. In reading it I am reminded of the words spoken about Our Lord. Surely, no one could write these words Dr. Furfey has written, unless he lived them in his own life, and "except God be with him."

The Fiction Mills

By John T. Appleby

AT THIS present writing I am perched high on pillows, like the princess who could feel a pea beneath seven feather mattresses, and I reek of Uncle Sammy's Lone Star Liniment, good for sprains, aches, bruises, cuts and sores on man or beast.

I spent the week-end fishing in a turbulent Ozark stream. After climbing bluffs and wading sloughs and crawling through bramble thickets, I established myself on a boulder in the middle of some very rapid rapids and set to work casting flies over the landscape. I hooked an enormous bass, and in the excitement I fell off the boulder and into the rapids. My progress was hampered by a heavy pair of G. I. shoes, and I was battered against rocks and all but drowned. To top it off, I had a glass minnow trap strapped to my back, and in my threshings about I broke the minnow trap and embedded fragments of glass in my back.

Consequently I look with a jaundiced eye upon books about nature. If the books deal with the lives of wild animals, my eye becomes even more jaundiced. And if the wild animal happens to be a noble stag pursued by the huntsman, my eye closes completely.

If you want to know how it feels to be a stag, by all means read "The Last Hunt," by Maurice Genevoix. It is beautifully written, and the illustrations by Lynd Ward are exquisite.

THE IDEA behind "Seven Against the Years" is pretty trite and obvious. Mr. North selects seven members of the class of '29 at the University of Chicago and traces their careers during the ten years following their graduation. The geologist goes to work in an automobile factory and becomes a leader in his union; the meat-packer's son develops into a caricature of a meat-packer; the radical intellectual becomes a Socialist and seduces the meat-packer's wife; the pious one finds a berth as a worker in a Home for the Hopeless; the poet emerges as a literary editor, and so on.

The technique of developing a novel through a group of characters thrown together by the fortuitous concourse of circumstances is not a new one. In Mr. North's hands it is not a particularly successful one. "Seven Against the Years" is a set of outlines for seven distinct novels; by crowding them all into one book the author escapes the necessity of working any one of the outlines into a complete and satisfying form.

Some of the sketches, for they are no more than that, are rather good; others, like the section devoted to Mark Harboard, the literary editor, which is said by the publisher to be largely autobiographical, are full of treacle and sophomoric vapourings.

"Seven Against the Years" is too shallow to constitute effective social criticism, and the characters fall too easily into standard types to be really interesting.

STERLING NORTH

Author of "Seven Against The Years"

LAST WINTER Mr. Walpole gave us a study of a young wife who married into a family dominated by a mother who conceived a violent hatred for the wife. Elinor Mordaunt, in "Return to Spring," presents a young wife married to a weakling completely under the thumb of a spinster sister, who likewise hates the young wife.

Caroline Ware really does have a hard time of it. First she marries a bestial clergyman who drinks himself to death. Then she falls into the tender mercies of Bertram Field's three sisters. All that prevents Mrs. Mordaunt from calling her book "The Sorrows of Caroline" is the fact that Caroline at last learns to love a surgeon who helps rescue her from this abnormal set of in-laws. Although I don't want to seem unchivalrous by damning Mrs. Mordaunt with faint praise, I must admit that I found "Return to Spring" more readable than "The Sea Tower."

"THE LAST HUNT," by Maurice Genevoix. (Random House, $2.50.)

"SEVEN AGAINST THE YEARS," by Sterling North. (Macmillan, $2.50).

"RETURN TO SPRING," by Elinor Mordaunt. (Greystone, $2.50.)

Lightning Lore

"PLAYING WITH LIGHTNING," by Dr. K. B. McEachron in collaboration with Kenneth G. Patrick. (Random House, $2.50.)

THE READER of this book finds in it many features of a good detective story, for after all lightning is an arch criminal whose subjugation can be most interesting and certainly will require as great ingenuity as does the subjugation of the human criminal. He learns, perhaps to his surprise, that proper guards against the destructive effects of lightning are needed not merely to protect his life but to assure him uninterrupted enjoyment of electrical conveniences. He gains an understanding of the measuring and recording devices and techniques which are helping to unravel the mysteries of lightning and which find use in many other fields of science. He learns with pride, no doubt tempered with some misgiving, of another achievement of man's ingenuity, the simulation in the laboratory of the lightning flash and thunderbolt.

One more interesting fact is added to his store of knowledge concerning the well known Empire State Building, it has become a guinea pig for the study of lightning. He finds a discussion of some of the questions which he may have wished to ask; for instance, what makes a thunderstorm, are lightning rods of any real value, where is the safest place in a home during a storm? Do tall trees nearby protect a home? The answers to these questions and others are given in such detail and with such reservations as present knowledge warrants.

The authors remark that lightning, like war, is a product without a market and man's sole aim is to prevent its destructive action. The book shows that as regards lightning man's dream is likely to be fulfilled. One cannot help but wonder if man's ingenuity will ever eliminate war's destruction.

OF THE BIDDLES AND A BALLAD: The summertime schedule is beginning to slow down for everybody except Presidential and Congressional candidates, but it's whipping up to top speed for Solicitor General Francis Biddle and his wife, who is known to the writing world as Katherine Garrison Chapin. The two will be heading homeward to Philadelphia this week-end—but not for the Republican convention. New Dealers, they'll pass that up. Mr. Biddle is scheduled to speak at the Pennsylvania Bar Association meeting at Bedford Springs, Pa., on Thursday, and on Saturday he and Mrs. Biddle will be in Philadelphia for the wedding of his nephew, Peyton Randolph Biddle and Frances Packard.

On Monday, June 24 (and this is where the ballad angle comes in), one of Miss Chapin's poems, "And They Lynched Him On A Tree" is to be presented with musical background at a concert at the Lewisohn Stadium in New York. Bigwigs by the dozens, including Mrs. Roosevelt and Mayor La Guardia, are planning to be there, and the program promises to be outstanding on many accounts. The ballad, written for a chorus, was published in the June 8 issue of The Nation. Set to music by William Grant Still, the Negro composer, it will be sung by a chorus of 50 voices from the Schola Cantorum and the Wen Talbert Choir, assisting the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra.

Yesterday afternoon, talk of the coming concert circulated freely in the small group of friends that Mr. and Mrs. Biddle gathered in at tea time to meet Miss Dorle Jarmel, of New York, one of the moving spirits of the Philharmonic Association and the stadium concerts. Miss Jarmel is the week-end guest of Democratic committee publicity woman, Hazel Reavis.

POTPOURRI: How the women correspondents assigned to cover the Republican convention will ever have time to file their stories is a mystery to me. Parties for the femme scribes are piling up by the minute. One of the biggest will be given by the Women's National Republican Club at its headquarters, the Benjamin Franklin Hotel, on Tuesday, June 25. Mrs. Charles M. Lea is planning a press party, too. . . . The Justice Robertses have a cow that's afflicted with hay fever, of all things. She chews her cud in complete solitude; has been assigned to a stall as far removed as possible from the flower beds at Bryn Coed, the Roberts' estate near Kimberton, Pa. . . . Trust-buster Thurman Arnold might check up on the activities of Marsh and Kimball Clark, twin sons of Senator and Mrs. Bennett Clark. It seems the youngsters have practically cornered the soft drink market with their lemonade stand in front of the Clark house on Quebec street. However, they'll have to close shop soon, and will leave with Mrs. Clark this week for a summer cottage in Eagles Mere, Pa. Incidentally, the Clarks' other son, Champ 3d, is attending a house party in St. Augustine, Fla.

WHISPERS AND DRUMBEATS: Which Washington hostess, a frequent visitor in Capitol galleries, recently has been showering non-interventionist of Senators with peppery epistles, designed to change their point of view? And with no success at all thus far . . . Capital glamour boys had better look to their laurels. Verbal bouquets from all sides are being tossed in the direction of distinguished silver-haired Edward Stettinius, who got much more attention at a recent dinner party than did Justice Frank Murphy . . . A certain Senate wife went completely overboard for the handsome defense commissioner that same evening. "Why he's simply wonderful!" she gushed. "So interesting; and so handsome." Then she added dreamily, "A kind of pocket-edition Paul McNutt."

Everybody seems to be showering the Senate contingent with attention these days. Especially diplomats. I can remember when cer-

Once the Washington residence of the King and Queen of Siam, Anderson House, former home of Mr. and Mrs. Larz Anderson, and now the national headquarters of the Society of the Cincinnati, will be on view with all its exquisite art treasures on Wednesday. On that day there will be a reception given by the president general and the society under the patronage of the Ambassador of France, Count de Saint-Quentin.

At top right, Miss Barbara Bolling pauses for a moment at one of the famous statue fountains. To her left Mme. Lucet, wife of a secretary of the French Embassy, and Mme. Lombard, wife of Col. Lombard, Military Attache of the French Embassy, discuss plans for the party over a cup of tea.

Miss Andrews Introduced To Society

Dinner at Chevy Chase Club Follows Reception

THE RECIPE for a successful Washington debut this season—a garden reception followed by a dinner at the Chevy Chase Club—was carried out gaily yesterday by Mrs. Atherton Macondray and her daughter, Miss Mary Lord Andrews.

Scene of the party was the home of Commander and Mrs. Macondray, Vauclose, on Seminary Hill Alexandria. The slender, dark-haired debutante wore white organza, simple in design, with an off-the-shoulder neckline. White velvet bowknots trimmed the skirt and bodice, and she carried a cluster of spring blossoms. Her mother had chosen cream-colored lace with panels of pale green chiffon.

The guests were not limited to Washington, but included many from Virginia, where Miss Andrews has numerous connections. Pouring tea and coffee were Mrs. James Carroll Frazer, Mrs. Powell Minnigerode, Mrs. Ralston Holmes, Mrs. J. M. Holton, Mrs. Louis Greene, Mrs. Robert E. Lee, Mrs. Smith Hempstone, Mrs. George Maurice Morris, Mrs. Henry Flood, Mrs. Charles de Vere Drayton, Mrs. Philip Lee Phillips and Mrs. Charles Beatty Moore and Mrs. Gardner Boothe, of Alexandria.

ASSISTING THE DEBUTANTE were the Misses Patricia Prochnik, Yolanda Alfaro, Betty Drayton, Peggy Tuckerman, Mariana Evans, Patricia McKnew, Catherine Clement, Coby Ranneft, Sita Finkenstaedt, Margaret Houghteling, Helen Carter Andrews and Carter Randolph Andrews, sisters of the deb, Joy Bagnell, of St. Louis, a cousin, and Louise Stires, granddaughter of Mme. Louise Homer.

The debutante, who finished at Holton Arms School this year, is from an old Washington family. Her father was the late Eliphalet Fraser Andrews, who served with the French Ambulance Corps before joining the American forces in the last war. She is the granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cowles Tucker — Mr. Tucker was a leading Washington lawyer—and of the late Mrs. Marietta Minnigerode Andrews. On her mother's side of the family she is related on both sides to such distinguished colonials as Kemps, Taliaferros, and Grymes, and on father's side to Carters, Minnigerodes and Lees.

Miss Darlington Honored at Tea Yesterday

With a merry dinner dance planned on Long Island for June 22, Miss Elaine Darlington, daughter of Mrs. George Angus Garrett, made a preliminary bow yesterday afternoon at a tea given by her mother at her old home, Highlawn, in Sewickley, Pa., where the bud lived for a number of years.

Any number of Washington debutantes will travel up to Long Island for the dinner dance to be given next Saturday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Clarkson at their place in Bayville in honor of Miss Garrett.

Yesterday's party was given from 4 until 7 o'clock in the afternoon. The debutante was gowned in a filmy pink organza frock trimmed in green. The gown was made with a tight bodice, bouffant skirt and long pink organza gloves. Mrs. Garrett selected a smart green and white print ensemble with a fitted jacket.

Following the debut tea Mr. and Mrs. George Hann, of Sewickley, entertained at a dinner dance in honor of Miss Darlington at the Alleghany Country Club. Today Mrs. Henry Rea will entertain at a large luncheon at her home in Sewickley for a number of Miss Darlington's contemporaries as well as their parents.

Mrs. Garrett and her daughter will fly back to Washington today and will remain here until Wednesday when they will leave for Long Island.

Lesley Burchell Weds Lieut. McFarland In Military Ceremony at St. John's Church

Underwood & Underwood

MRS. EARL McFARLAND, JR.,
the former Miss Lesley Burchell, daughter of Mrs. N. Landon Burchell

A COLORFUL military wedding was that yesterday afternoon of Miss Lesley Burchell, daughter of Mrs. N. Landon Burchell, of Washington, to Lieut. Earl McFarland, jr., U. S. A., son of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Earl McFarland, of this city. The bridegroom and all but one of his ushers were classmates at West Point, wore their uniforms and carried their swords.

The ceremony took place at 4:30 at St. John's Episcopal Church, the rector, the Rev. Oliver J. Hart, officiating. He was assisted by the Rev. Clayton E. Wheat, former chaplain of West Point.

The bride was given in marriage by her guardian, C. F. R. Ogilby. Her gown of cream-colored satin was made with a sweetheart neckline and a straight panel styled from the bodice to the top of the skirt. Her veil of bridal illusion fell from a wreath of orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of gardenias and lilies of the valley.

MISS CHARLOTTE BURCHELL was maid of honor, and the bridesmaids were Mrs. Hamilton A. Twitchell, of Fort Benning, Ga.; Miss Ann Franklin Wood, of Richmond, Va.; Miss Ruth Alexander, of West Point, and Miss Anne B. Hawley, of Washington. They wore dresses of cream net over taffeta—Miss Burchell's was entirely net—made with puffed sleeves, sweetheart necklines and basque bodices. Their leghorn hats were trimmed with turquoise velvet and they carried old-fashioned bouquets of roses and forget-me-nots edged with a frill of cream net to match their dresses.

Lieut. Hamilton A. Twitchell, brother-in-law of Lieut. McFarland, was best man, and the ushers were Lieuts. A. Gordon Malone, Robert Thorne Tuck, Raymond H. Goodrich, Urey W. Alexander, Raymond L. Shoemaker, jr., and Charles Heasty.

A RECEPTION at the home of Mrs. Burchell followed the ceremony. The bride's mother wore a mist blue gown with white sequins on the bodice and the shield-shaped pockets and a corsage of white orchids. Mrs. McFarland had chosen dusty rose chiffon made on simple lines, with a burgundy hat and white orchid corsage.

After a honeymoon, the couple will live at Fort Benning. The bride attended Mount Vernon Seminary and Vassar College and is a member of the Junior League of Washington. Lieut. McFarland is a graduate of St. Alban's School and of the United States Military Academy, class of 1940.

AMONG THE out-of-town guests at the weding were Mrs. Clayton E. Wheat and Col. and Mrs. Roger Alexander, of West Point; Mrs. J. S. Royster, of Blue Ridge Summit, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Wood, Mrs. H. V. Desportes and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Desportes, all of Richmond; Mr. and Mrs. N. R. Gibson, of Lewiston, N. Y., and Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Sheily, of Ambler, Pa.; Miss Ethel Wedge, of Baltimore, and Thomas Graham, of Philadelphia.

MRS. C. P. DONNELLY

Cynthia Hathaway, C. P. Donnelly Wed

A PROFUSION OF WHITE peonies, gladioli and ferns adorned St. John's Church in Bethesda, Md., for the marriage of Miss Cynthia Hathaway to Charles Pinckney Donnelly yesterday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock. The Rev. Joseph Williams officiated. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison R. Hathaway, of Edgemoor, Md., and Golden Beach, Fla. Mr. Donnelly is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Donnelly, of Long Island.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a white dotted Swiss gown with a tight bodice, long bishop sleeves and very full skirt. The skirt had a deep ruffle about the hem and slight train. She wore an heirloom veil, which her mother had worn, and carried a white prayer book with a shower of gardenias.

MISS HELEN HATHAWAY, wearing a yellow embroidered organdy gown, served as maid of honor. The frock was fashioned with a square neckline, puffed sleeves and full skirt. Her wide-brimmed maline hat was of yellow trimmed with blue streamers and she carried a bouquet of blue delphinium.

The remaining attendants were Miss Anne Hathaway, another sister; Mrs. Robert Donnelly, Miss Harriette Hartnett and Miss Mary Splawn. They wore blue organdy frocks made like the maid of honor's and matching hats with yellow streamers.

ROBERT DONNELLY, of Brooklyn, N. Y., served as best man for his brother. Ushers were Jackson Dawson, Carl Stove, Charles Donnelly and William Coburn.

Following the ceremony there was a reception at the home of the bride's parents in Edgemoor. The large garden was put into use and the buffet table, where refreshments were served, was centered with sprays of Florida gardenias. Mrs. Hathaway, who received with the couple, wore a printed Swiss organdy gown and blue hat. The bridegroom's mother had chosen a beige chiffon and lace gown with a black hat.

Welleses Fete Debutante At Garden Party

Approximately 100 youngsters motored to Oxon Hill to the lovely estate of the Undersecretary of State and Mrs. Sumner Welles for a party yesterday afternoon which they gave in honor of Miss Louise Stillwell, debutante daughter of Senora de Espil.

Informality reigned. With Mrs. Welles, the pretty bud received on the terrace which overlooks the Potomac. A large tea table had been set up by the swimming pool, where a tempting array of food was displayed.

Among the young men attending the party was Arnold Welles, the Undersecretary's son, who was graduated from Yale University this month.

Although this was strictly a young-set affair, Mrs. Welles did ask a few of her contemporaries "just to have some one to talk to," she announced laughingly.

INTO WASHINGTON, the social center, come bits of society news from all points of the compass . . . Betty Meyers was married Thursday in Honolulu to Roscoe Dillon, Lieutenant, U. S. N. Betty, who was one of the '38-'39 debutantes, went to Hawaii last fall with her mother, Mrs. Howard Meyers, just for the whirl—and what a whirl. Roscoe Dillon is the son of Capt. and Mrs. Roscoe Dillion who recently came from Panama to Washington to live, following Capt. Dillon's retirement from the Navy . . . Marian Achilles, whose husband, Ted, has been stationed at our embassy in London, landed in this country Sunday accompanied by her three children. After living in war-shadowed England, Marian will now take her children to sunny California, where they will spend the summer with Ted's family. It looks as though her friends here are due for a disappointment as her present plans will take her directly West from New York, where she is staying at the Plaza Hotel . . .

BETTY BEALE

From the other side we hear that Ditlef Knudsen, former Norwegian Attache here, and his wife have left their post in Turkey and are somewhere in the Mediterranean now on board an American freighter. Their destination is Washington, U. S. A. It is very likely that Ditlef's services will be required at the Norwegian Legation, here, which is now handling the bulk of Norwegian shipping interests . . . And to distant points are going American Foreign Service Officers. The Dick Hawkins will soon leave for their new post in Brisbane, Australia, and the Delano McKelveys have been transferred to Vigo, Spain, where they expect to go about July 1 . . . From the big city comes word that Cy Whitney has gone to Japan with a trade commission. Cy is connected with an investment counsel in New York . . .

JANE EUSTIS' AND GEORGE WHEELER'S wedding is providing the ideal excuse for a string of parties that will make next week's calendar read like the Christmas rush. On June 22 (a full week ahead!—for recuperation?) the bachelor dinner will take place at the University Club . . . On June 23 Bubbie Harris (maid of honor) will entertain in their honor with a picnic supper for the wedding party only at her sister and brother-in-law's, the Doug Laings', place in Herndon, Va. . . . On the 24th Mildred and Bill Garnett will give a cocktail party for the aforementioned couple, and the next day Ammonett Gordon will do likewise . . . On the 27th Stellita Stapleton will be dinner hostess at the Chevy Chase Club for Jane and George and on the following evening George's mother, Mrs. Carlos del Mar, will entertain at dinner . . . On the 29th—wedding bells . . .

MORE ABOUT Washington's changing personnel—and surely this town takes all prizes for constant variety . . . We shall be sorry to see Mitzi Sims leave on June 28 for Montreal where she plans to live. She will, of course, come back to Washington for an occasional visit . . . It's good to see Barbara Korff back after several years in New York, where she has been doing fashion designing. Barbara and her mother, Baroness Korff, have taken a new house on Foxhall road . . .

THE MONTGOMERY BLAIRS are receiving congratulations on the birth of their fourth daughter. Virginia Blair's term as president of the Junior League of Washington officially began a week ago when Cecil Jones relinquished the gavel, Mrs. Blair's duties actually begin this fall. It looks as though the Blairs will practically have a monopoly on the Junior League of 1960!

HERE AND THERE:

The Robert Guggenheims will entertain at dinner tonight on their yacht, Firenze . . . Luncheon guests at Celeste Miller's today will include the Jouett Shouses, the Patrick Hurleys, the Marquis de Zahara, Margaret Cowell and Charles Hume . . . The Aldace Walkers, Margot and Joe McCammon, and the Gray Fosters are week-ending with the Charles Lipscombs at the latter's place, Rollyston, on the Eastern Shore . . . Natika and George Ellman have moved to Warrenton where they have leased a house of the Robert Winmills' next to the North Wales Club. An unusually attractive couple, the Ellimans have had parties galore given in their honor . . .

The Forrester Davisons moved into their newly finished house on Observatory Circle and almost at once they left yesterday for New York and Nova Scotia. They will be gone six weeks . . . Anne Clark, who departed yesterday for Vermont, where she is placing her daughter in camp, will return to the home town July 2 . . . Mr. and Mrs. William MacCracken left Friday for a week's stay in New York . . .

tain envoys and their wives were palsy-walsy with only upper crust social celebrities and knew members of the Congressional circle only by name, if at all. Now, it has all changed. And almost any diplomat counts that day lost when he hasn't lunched or dined with at least one Senator or Representative.

ON THE RECEIVING END: The maid who answers the telephone at Admiral Pettengill's quarters gives me a good laugh every time I call and ask to speak to Mrs. Pettengill.

"The madam?" invariably begins the answer. "Well, the madam's not in now."

"And when is she expected to return?" I inquire.

"Well, the madam won't be in for quite a while. Shall I tell the madam who asked for her?"

And that makes only four "madams" in one telephone call.

BUNDLES—PAST AND PRESENT: Nobody can deny that the Bundles for Britain party last Sunday was a howling success—except that there wasn't enough tea to go around. But fitting apologies have already been circulated to the effect that the committee regretted sincerely that anyone came and went without being served.

Anyway, Bundles for Britain publicity reminded several Washingtonians of similar projects in the past, when clothing was collected right and left for refugees in the Near East. In the Capital now are four women who have had a hand in every type of repatriation and relief activity.

Mrs. Foster Stearns did splendid work with the White Russians in Constantinople (now Istanbul). Miss Anna S. Mitchell and Miss Alma L'H. Ruggles both worked in France and then with the Russian refugees in Constantinople. Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie worked in Russia, Turkey, Bulgaria and Greece. She established the first Thrift Shop in Turkey and later in 1928 she was the organizer of a shop in Washington to dispose of articles made by refugees.

Alice Moeller Wed to D. C. Army Man

Lieut. W. D. Coleman And Bride to Live At Fort Lewis; Motor to West Coast

St. Luke's Lutheran Church in New York was the scene of the wedding yesterday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock of Miss Alice Louise Moeller, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Henry Nicholas Moeller, of New York, to Lieut. Wilson Dudley Coleman, U. S. A., son of Mrs. W. P. Coleman, of Washington and San Antonio, Tex., and the late Col. Coleman.

The Rev. Charles Niebacher officiated at the ceremony, which was followed by a small reception at the Hotel Carlyle. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore her mother's wedding gown and veil of rose point lace and satin and carried lilies of the valley.

Mrs. D. Benton Grittenden, cousin of the bride's sister, Miss Constance Josephine Moeller, were matron and maid of honor. They wore duckling yellow net frocks made with full skirts, and hats of shirred net to match. The bridesmaids, the Misses Else Seringhaus and Ruth Griffin, were dressed in cornflower blue.

Lieut. Benjamin W. Hawes, U. S. A., of Fort Meade, Md., was best man, and the ushers were Lieut. E. I. Davis, of West Point, N. Y.; Lieut. A. L. Ashman, of Fort Totten, N. Y., and Lieut. J. A. Hill, of Fort Hamilton, N. Y.

After a motor trip to the West Coast, the couple will make their home in Fort Lewis, Wash. The bride attended Miss Chandor's School, in New York, and Sarah Lawrence College. Lieut Coleman is a graduate of Culver Military Academy and of West Point, class of 1935.

Mr. and Mrs. John Scollay Coffey, whose marriage took place last Tuesday in Radnor, Pa., are now on a southern honeymoon. They will make their home in Wynnewood, Pa.

Mrs. Coffey is the former Miss Jeanne Marie Clader, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Stanley Clader. The Rev. Croswell McBee officiated at the ceremony.

Miss Elizabeth Shaefer Mulford, of Wayne, Pa., was maid of honor, and William Meredith Coffey was best man. Mr. Coffey is the son of Capt. R. B. Coffey, U. S. N., and Mrs. Coffey.

District Girl Weds Navy Officer Here

Mary E. Crawford Becomes Bride Of Lieut. John Fleps

THE MARRIAGE OF Miss Mary Elizabeth Crawford, daughter of Lieut. Col. and Mrs. Robert Crawford, took place yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock to Lieut. Carl John Fleps, jr., U. S. N., at the home of the bride's parent's on Van Ness street. Lieut. Fleps is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl John Fleps, of Youngstown, Ohio. The Rev. R. A. Luhman officiated at the ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a white lace gown with a sweetheart neckline, puffed sleeves and small train. Her finger-tip length veil was caught with a cluster of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of white orchids.

THE COUPLE did not have attendants. Following the ceremony a small reception was held. Spring flowers decorated the house. The bay window, before which the couple took their vows, was filled with ferns and a large basket of calla lilies.

The couple left, following the reception, for a motor tour to San Francisco. They will sail July 20, for the Philippine Islands. The bride wore a traveling suit of blue and white and an orchid corsage.

Lieut. Fleps was graduated from the United States Naval Academy, class of '38.

Scientific Group Party Guests Of Wade Ellises'

Roses vied with the blooming mountain laurel yesterday afternoon at Rippon Lodge when Mr. and Mrs. Wade H. Ellis entertained at a garden party for members of the Archaeological Society of Washington, of which Mr. Ellis is president.

Wearing a red and white printed chiffon afternoon frock and a scarlet straw hat, Mrs. Ellis received her guests informally between the hours of 4 and 7 o'clock. Tables had been set up over the lawn, where guests congregated to sip tea and eat tea time dainties.

Although Mr. and Mrs. Ellis are keeping their home on Massachusetts avenue open, they are spending the balance of their time at their lodge in Virginia, which overlooks the Potomac River.

Miss Cockrell Becomes Wife Of Lieut. Pace

Couple on Wedding Trip Through The Southwest

The marriage of Miss Martha Alison Cockrell and Lieut. Herbert Edward Pace, jr., U. S. A., took place yesterday at the Church of the Covenant. The Rev. Bernard Braskamp officiated. The bride is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Benjamin Alison Cockrell, Lieut. Pace is the son of Col. and Mrs. Herbert Pace, sr., now stationed in San Antonio, Tex., having recently returned from a tour of duty in the Philippines.

The bride wore a pastel blue frock with a brown horsehair hat trimmed in velvet ribbons, and she carried a bouquet of Johanna Hill roses. After the ceremony there was a breakfast at the home of the bride's parents on Connecticut avenue.

Lieut. and Mrs. Pace have left for an extended tour of the Southwest. They will sail early in September for the Philippine Islands, where Lieut. Pace is stationed. Lieut. Pace was graduated from the United States Military Academy this June.

Miss Frederick Wed in Quaint Ceremony

IN THE PICTURESQUE Friends ceremony, Miss Pauline Frederick became the bride of W. Wilson Stabler last evening at 5 o'clock in the Florida avenue Friends Meeting House. The bride is the daughter of Walter H. Frederick, of Los Angeles, Calif., and the late Mrs. Frederick. Mr. Stabler is the son of Mrs. Tarlton B. Stabler, of Kennett Square, Pa., and the late Mr. Stabler.

A profusion of summer flowers adorned the meeting house where the bridegroom escorted his bride to take their vows. She wore a white jacket frock with a cluster of white roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Frances E. Wells, of Detroit, Mich., cousin of the bride, was maid of honor. She wore a pink ensemble and a corsage of talisman roses with baby's breath

E. KENNETH STABLER, of Waterford, Va., served as his brother's best man and ushers included four other brothers. They were R. Hallet Stabler, of Moorestown, N. J., Donald B. Stabler, of Malvern, Pa., R. Rowland Stabler, of Redland, Md., and Joseph M. Stabler, of Kennett Square, Pa. A cousin of the bride, Victor Russell Wells, of Detroit, Mich., also served.

Following the ceremony there was a supper at the home of R. Rowland Stabler at Redland, Md. The couple left shortly thereafter for a brief wedding trip.

Stage, Opera Stars to Sing At Benefit

Richard Crooks, Kitty Carlisle To Feature Party At Anderson House

RICHARD CROOKS, Metropolitan Opera tenor, will sing a group of songs at the reception to be given at Anderson House by the president general and the Society of the Cincinnati, under the patronage of the Ambassador of France, Count de Saint-Quentin, Wednesday afternoon from 4 to 7.

Still another star—Kitty Carlisle—now appearing in a Broadway production, is flying to Washington for the benefit and will sing during the afternoon. Both stars are making this contribution to the fund being raised for antiaircraft defense canteens in France.

Mrs. Larz Anderson, only woman to be honored with associate membership in the Society of the Cincinnati, will arrive in Washington tomorrow, going to her old home where she will stay until after the Wednesday benefit.

ANDERSON HOUSE, her gift to the society, is now its national headquarters and museum. Within its hospitable doors, visiting royalty and various foreign missions have been entertained. The King and Queen of Siam were guests in the house when they made their now historic visit to Washington. And in that connection it will be recalled that the late Charles Lee Cook, of the Department of State, said that Anderson House was the one house in Washington perfectly appointed for the entertainment of distinguished visitors. The staff of servants was adequate, the kitchens beautifully equipped, the service regal.

The entire museum with its magnificent art collection will be on view to visitors Wednesday. One of the most interesting rooms is the Key Room so called from the Greek pattern on the mosiac floor. A large mural depicts President Washington presenting the diploma of the Cincinnati to the Marquis de Lafayette with [illegible] de Rochambeau, Baron de Steuben and other officers in the background. Other historic paintings adorn the other walls. There are richly carved cases containing gold saki cups, Japanese eighteenth century lacquer presentation cups and decorations awarded to Capt. and Mrs. Larz Anderson, among them her French Croix de Guerre, and historical documents of the Cincinnati.

THE FRENCH ROOM, a harmony in white and gold; the billiard room, ballroom, [illegible] library, gallery, English drawing room, and dining room are filled with treasures from all corners of the globe, collected by Capt. and Mrs. Anderson during their travels.

Women prominent in social, civic and patriotic circles will assist at the reception, showing guests about the house, explaining the history of many of the treasures. During the afternoon tea will be served in the dining room and out in the garden, many distinguished women taking turns at the tea table.

Debutantes will be on hand, wearing their tri-color rosettes, and Sidney and his orchestra will play throughout the afternoon.

Admission tickets are on sale at Anderson House, at historic Blair House, 1651 Pennsylvania avenue, and at the Mayflower. Also, they may be purchased at the door the day of the reception. All money will be sent to France for the equipment of needed canteens of the Defense Contra Avions, of which Mrs. Anderson is American chairman.

Gorman-Thaler Wedding June 30

Miss Sophia Thaler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Thaler, of Winber, Pa., whose engagement to Herman Gorman was announced recently, has selected June 30 as her wedding day.

Mr. Gorman is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Gorman, of Conduit road, Washington. He was graduated from the University of Maryland in 1933 and is a member of Tau Epsilon Phi Fraternity.

DIPLOMATIC CIRCLING

Mrs. W. D. Robbins Sails For South America

By Carolyn Bell.

A "GEORGE WASHINGTON" in every United States Embassy is the ultimate goal of Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins. To date, however, Uncle Sam's decorator has been completely balked in her desire to deck our numerous embassies with portraits of the Father of his Country. Works Projects Administration art work is the only decoration allowed, but the dashing Mrs. Robbins still has hope.

Mrs. Robbins sailed on Wednesday for South America, "and by jove I am paying for this jaunt myself," she said. Her particular destination is Uruguay, where a new legation is nearing completion. Armed with blueprints and sketches she will direct the finishing touches on the colonial style building with its high white pillars. Completely surrounded by lush gardens the new legation will be one of the loveliest in Latin America. A large house, it has a drawing room, reception hall, library and dining room—not to mention actual living quarters.

THE INTERIOR is to be a well-blended composite of Chippendale, Queen Anne and Federal American furniture. Every stick of furniture, the materials and what-not are purchased in the U. S.—taxpayers, you know! Almost every interior of a new legation or embassy built by this country is modeled on the same pattern, but the exteriors vary. In tropical countries, the buildings are usually of Spanish inspiration. Incidentally, Mrs. Robbins packed her heaviest furs, for when she reaches Uruguay winter will be at its peak—and cold.

THE MAILS ARE tantalizingly slow these days for those who have families abroad. Mme. Wancowicz, wife of the former Counselor of the Polish Embassy, who is now director of the Polish Pavillon at the World's Fair, had a letter recently from her daughter, Mme. Popiel, after a long period of silence. As has been reported before, Mme. Popiel's husband, Stanislaw Popiel, was thrown into a prison camp shortly after the rape of Poland. At present Mme. Popiel and her mother-in-law are attempting to run their large plantation in Poland. Although they know next to nothing about the growing of rye, wheat, sugar beets or the cultivating of orchards and fish ponds the two women have pitched in and are making a fair success of the venture.

GLEANINGS from recent parties:

As she walked into the bouquet-filled room at a debut, a diplomat's wife realized with dismay that she had forgotten to send the accustomed gift of flowers. Undaunted this lively and lovely lady selected the prettiest bouquet in the room and coyly dropped her calling card on it.

BEE SOKOLOWSKI, wife of a former Polish diplomat, applied recently for citizenship papers. Although this is not news it brought about an amusing incident: One of her godmothers (one must have two) was Vera Bloom. At the last moment the other lady was unable to be on hand so the Blooms' colored chauffeur was pressed into duty!

SIBILLA SKIDELSKY must hold the record for Red Cross knitting. Since the war began she has made no less than 12 sweaters. But Sibilla is not pleased, for her goal is two sweaters a day.

POISON GREEN is the name fashion editors would give the absinthe-tinted outfit worn so well by Mrs. Robert Scotten, wife of the United States Minister to the Dominican Republic. Mrs. Scotten looks very much like a younger Lynn Fontanne. At this particular party—attended by well over a thousand people—Mrs. Scotten was the sartorial hit of the afternoon in her startling green ensemble.

The Service Set

By Elizabeth Henney

West Point's June Week has come and gone, and many a graduated cadet and his O. A. O. are now "Lieut. and Mrs.——" a honeymooning. For the past several years there has been a rule at the Academy that no weddings may take place in the Cadet Chapel on the day of graduation, but the day afterward—what a rush there is. This year there were 30 weddings scheduled for June 12.

Highlights of June Week . . . Sun flashing in blinding sparks from the "tarbuckets" and polished brass of the cadet uniforms on the parade ground . . . Starry-eyed couples wandering hand in hand down Flirtation Walk (and Kissing Rock hasn't fallen yet!) . . . The legend is of course that if a "femme" should refuse the proper forfeit at the point where the famous rock hangs over the pathway, there will be a terrific crash of retribution . . . Graduation hop and the last dance, "Army Blue," when only the first classmen and their O. A. O.'s dance in the dimmed lights, and old grads look on with a throb of memory . . . Garduation exercises and the unashamed tears in the eyes of the first captain as he sings "Alma Mater" with the corps for the last time . . . Afternoon of graduation day and the new lieutenants in all the glory of the Army blue, their uniforms spick and span, glistening in the sun, and pride swelling to the bursting point within them—the old school days left behind, already almost forgotten—and new life, new paths, a new career all to come . . . Happy landings, graduates of 1940, and may you, with the motto, "Duty, Honor, Country," always in your hearts, carry on until the last note of taps is sounded with the final benediction, "Soldier, the duty was well done."

Mrs. Morgenthau Heads Patroness List for Concert

Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., heads the list of patronesses for a concert to be given for the benefit of the American Red Cross Wednesday evening, at 8:30, at the Carlton Hotel.

The list includes Mrs. H. J. Anslinger, Mrs. Edward B. Burling, Mrs. Theodore W. Dominick, Mrs. Walter C. Louchheim, jr., Mrs. Evelyn Walsh McLean, Mrs. Nelson E. Perin and Miss Maxine Davis.

The concert for the war relief fund, is given under the auspices of the music committee, a group of musicians of whom Mrs. Herbert Wollner (Gertrude Price Wollner) is chairman, with Mrs. Julian Berla, Mrs. Katherine Frost and Mrs. Daniel Sayre.

Martha Norton and Walter Schoenewciss, duo-pianists, of New York, and a professional string quartet of Washington artists will be heard. The quartet is composed of Milton Schwartz, Jeno Sevely, George Wargo and Alden Finckel. Their program includes two piano selections of Bach, Pirani and Max Reger with Ravel arrangement from the Debussy nocturnes, from which his scintillating "Fetes" will be given. The string quartet will play a Mozart quartet, some Russian music and two old English airs arranged by Bridges.

An executive committee for the benefit includes Mrs. James M. Doran, chairman, Mrs. William V. Linder, Mrs. Paul W. Simonds and Mrs. Jessica R. Thies from whom tickets may be obtained.

Chevy Chase Couple Back After Tour

Hillyers Visited South America By Plane; Many On Vacation Trips

SUMMER TRAVELS and class reunions make interesting vacations for Chevy Chase and Bethesda families.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Hillyer have returned to their home in Blackthorn street from a month's vacation spent in travel by air in South America, down the East Coast and back up the West Coast with landings at many interesting places inland as well.

Dr. and Mrs. Harvey L. Curtis and their daughter, Miss Norma Curtis, are on an extended motor trip which included a stop at Michigan State University, where Dr. Curtis attended his class reunion. Miss Mildred Curtis, who is a student at the college went on with her parents for their vacation.

MR. AND MRS. George A. Finch went by plane on Friday to Richmond, Ind., to visit their daughter, Mrs. E. Orville Johnson, and her husband and little daughter.

Miss Winifred Whitney joined her parents, Mr. and Mrs. I. Ledgewood Whitney, at their home in Jenifer street, after a week's visit in Massachusetts. Miss Whitney visited Miss Grace Kelley, of Winter Hill, Sommerville, Mass.

Mrs. George W. Gravatt, who was for so many years a resident of Leland street, is honor guest at a party in celebration of her eightieth birthday today at her summer home, Scientists' Cliffs, in southern Maryland. Hosts for the party are Mrs. Gravatt's son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Flippo Gravatt, and her daughters, Mrs. Bert Miles, of Wilmington, Del., and Mrs. Bert McLaughlin, of Richmond.

• • • •

MISS ROSEMARY HAZARD, whose marriage to John Chapin Ropes will take place next Saturday was honor guest at a miscellaneous shower for which Mrs. William Blum was hostess on Thursday. The guests were a group of neighbors and friends of Miss Hazard's mother, Mrs. Elmont B. Hazard.

Mrs. M. Rea Shafer and her sons, Casper and Philip, will open their summer home at Valley Lee on the lower Potomac on Wednesday. The Rev. J. Luther Neff and Mrs. Neff spent last week at Mrs. Shafer's cottage.

Mrs. Fred N. Oliver entertained a group of her daughter, Marie's, classmates at the Academy of the Visitation, at her summer home at Valley Lee, last week-end.

• • • •

MR. AND MRS. DAVID Lloyd Davies have had as their guests Bob Richmond, of New York, and Frank McHugh, of Chippewa Falls, Wis., classmates of their son, David, at Johns Hopkins. Miss Dorothy Ann Wheatley, of Nashville, Tenn., is also visiting Mrs. Davies and spending some time with her aunts, Mrs. Thomas Borden and Mrs. A. B. Veazey, of Wilson lane.

There are always parties. Mr. and Mrs. Hewitt Griggs Robertson entertained at a dinner party for their nephew, William Wallace, who will shortly enter West Point.

Dr. and Mrs. E. Osmun Barr entertained at a small tea on Sunday when they invited friends to come in to see their rose garden.

• • • •

LUNCHEON OF THE WEEK was that given on Wednesday by Miss Jean Defandorf and Miss Jane Winings when they entertained at the home of the former in Maple avenue.

Mrs. Lester J. Brooks was a luncheon hostess on Thursday at the Kenwood Club.

ABOUT THE TOWN BY DUDLEY HARMON

MISS LAURA BLAIR is perhaps the only Washington debutante whose family has lived in the same house for over 100 years. The handsome Colonial mansion on Pennsylvania avenue, one of the few private homes in the heart of the city, has belonged to Blairs ever since Andrew Jackson's time, when Francis P. Blair was a member of Jackson's "kitchen cabinet."

The pretty debutante is tall, slender, with light brown hair and blue eyes. She has just been graduated from Foxcroft School down Middleburg way, and says she's now educated for life. Next year she will be with her family here and hopes to do social work, her chief interest at the moment. At Foxcroft she headed the school's social bureau, which worked with 500 families.

Miss Blair loves the theater, but has no stage ambitions. She also likes to write, but doesn't intend to go in for a career in authorship. Clothes interest her—occasionally she designs her own, and she prefers sports dresses to the fluffy kind.

Mr. and Mrs. Blair also own a house at Bar Harbor, and will leave June 22 to spend the summer there.

COOKING, SEWING, saddling a horse and pitching hay are just a few of the accomplishments of Miss Catharine Compton, debutante daughter of the Wilson Comptons. She is that very rare person, a girl who really likes to keep house, and she is the only deb so far to express genuine enthusiasm for domestic activities.

With Jean Wallace, daughter of the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, Miss Compton kept house all one summer two seasons ago in Michigan. On a budget of $10 a week, the girls marketed, cooked, cleaned and scrubbed for the whole season. Miss Compton says it was the pleasantest summer she ever had.

She can prepare a full meal, even for a dinner party. She also likes to sew and spent one Easter vacation learning how to make hats. Now she wants to apprentice herself to a dressmaker. Her ultimate ambition is to do designing—whether clothes or interior decoration, she hasn't yet decided.

After being graduated from Madeira last week, Miss Compton is spending the summer with her family at their 200-year-old farm in Herndon, Va., on the Potomac. She helps churn the butter and gather in the hay.

Next autumn this energetic deb will enter Wooster College in Ohio. She is the eighteenth Compton to go there, and her grandfather was dean of the college for 50 years. Incidentally, one of her uncles is president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology and another heads the physics department at the University of Chicago.

THE HUNT COUNTRY

By Nina Carter Tabb

Many of the debutantes are invited to the al fresco supper party which Dr. and Mrs. Charles P. Howze will give this evening at their home Woodburne on the Potomac River, in honor of Miss Lucy Mercer Marbury. Miss Marbury, deb of the season, attended the Upperville Horse Show Friday.

Mrs. Edward R. Stettinius, of New York, with her three sons, Wallace and the twins, Joseph and Edward, jr., arrived at their Virginia estate, Horse Shoe, near Rapidan a few days ago. They had previously visited Mrs. Stettinius' mother, Mrs. William Wallace, at Hampstead, Richmond. Mr. Stettinius, member of the National Defense Commission, joined his family at the farm for the week-end.

At a recent meeting of the Middleburg Garden Club, at the home of Mrs. William P. Montague, officers were elected for the coming year and plans were made for beautifying the village. Mrs. Montague was elected president; Mrs. Jack Duffey, vice president; Mrs. Otto Furr, secretary, and Mrs. H. A. Spitler, treasurer. It was also decided to give an ice cream festival Tuesday, June 18, to raise funds for the club. The festival is to take place at 4 o'clock and will be held on Mrs. Delbert Saffer's lawn.

The late Brig. Gen. "Billy" Mitchell spoke to many in the hunting country from the screen recently in a newsreel entitled "Wake Up, America," which Miss Mabel Waddell, manager of the Middleburg Theater, was successful in obtaining for three nights. It was of great interest there, where Gen. Mitchell and his family lived for many years after he retired from the Army.

Lieut. Abbey, Miss Quirk Are Married

Ritual Solemnized In Nativity Church; Couple to Leave For Glendale Soon

A profusion of white flowers served as background for the wedding of Miss Eleanor Katherine Quirk and Lieut. Richard Sargent Abbey, U. S. A., which took place yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Church of the Nativity. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Marcus Quirk. Lieut. Abbey is the son of Maj. and Mrs. Evers Abbey, of this city. The Rev. John F. Fannon officiated at the ceremony.

Wearing an ivory faille gown, the bride was given in marriage by her father. The frock, regal in its simplicity, had scrolls of self-crushed material on the sleeves and bodice, gracefully emphasizing the long torso lines. Her veil was of rare Brussels lace and fell from a cap of the lace. She carried a bouquet of orchids and lilies of the valley.

Miss Betty Clair Quirk was maid of honor for her sister. She was gowned in a marquisette frock of soft smoky blue, fashioned with a fitted bodice, and bouffant skirt with bands of shirring about the neck and skirt. Her large leghorn hat and darker blue velvet streamers. She carried an old-fashioned bouquet of Johanna Hill roses with blue cornflowers.

The other attendants were Miss Betty Abbey, sister of the bridegroom; Miss Claudine Bageant, Mrs. Robert Ruark, all of this city, and Miss Lucille Theroux, of Lawrence, Mass. They wore "shocking pink" marquisette frocks like the maid of honor's and wide-brimmed leghorn hats trimmed in dubonnet ribbons. They carried bouquets of token roses.

Lieut. Joseph P. Donohue, of Lawrence, Mass., was best man, and ushers were Lieut. George Mayo, of Alexandria, Va.; Lieut. William L. Clay, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Lieut. Leo Dunham, of Salisbury, Pa.; Lieut. Roderick Wetherill, Lieut. William Farthing and Lieut William Porte.

Following the ceremony there was a reception at the home of the bride's parents. Mrs. Quirk wore a gray chiffon frock with flowing sleeves and a girdle of violine pink and a matching hat. Her corsage was of orchids.

Mrs. Abbey had selected a black chantilly lace gown with matching hat and a corsage of sweetheart roses and forget-me-nots.

When the couple left for their wedding trip the bride wore a costume suit of chamois print silk with a red hat. They will spend three months at the summer home of the bridegroom's grandfather in Clinton, Conn. After September 1 they will be in Glendale, Calif., where Lieut. Abbey will be with the Air Corps.

The bride attended St. Mary's Female Seminary and the University of Munich in Germany. She graduated from Maryland University, class of '38, where she was a member of Alpha Omicron Pi Sorority.

Alvin Corbins Will Reside At 6100 14th St.

Couple to Make Home Here on Return From Honeymoon

NOW ON THEIR honeymoon after their marriage here on Monday, Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Leroy Corbin will make their home at 6100 Fourteenth street on their return.

The bride, the former Miss Frances Josephine Eichholz, is the daughter of Mrs. Henry Eichholz, of Waynesboro, Pa., and the late Mr. Eichholz. Mr. Corbin is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Corbin, of this city. Their wedding took place at 8 p. m. in the Calvary Methodist Church, the Rev. Orris G. Robinson officiating in a setting of palms and mixed flowers.

• • • •

HERMANN W. EICHHOLZ gave his sister in marriage. She wore a white slipper satin gown with a tulle veil fastened to a coronet and carried one white orchid with a shower of white roses and lilies of the valley.

Miss Jean McClellan, of Waynesboro, was maid of honor and the bride's other attendants were Mrs. W. W. Grove, her sister; Mrs. William Karjala, Miss Eleanor Corbin, sister of Mr. Corbin, and Mrs. Emerson Saylor, of Washington. They wore organdie frocks over taffeta—Miss McClellan, green; Mrs. Grove, blue; Mrs. Karjala, yellow, Miss Corbin, pink, and Mrs. Saylor, lavender. Their hats were covered with flowers to match their bouquets of spring blossoms.

• • • •

HAROLD KIESEL, of Washington, was best man, and the ushers were Edwin Holland, Bernard Jones, Ralph Lovell and William Armstrong.

As her going away costume the bride chose a white sharkskin skirt with a red and white top, a picture hat, and a corsage of orchids.

Miss Ammann Is Married To W. E. Pope

Nuptial Ceremony Takes Place at St. Alban's Church

THE WEDDING OF Miss Barbara Elizabeth Ammann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clayton A. Amman, of 3621 Garfield street, to Wendell Eugene Pope, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Pope, of Attapulgus, Ga., took place last evening at 8 o'clock at St. Alban's Church. The Rev. Charles T. Warner, the rector, officiated in a setting of ferns, palms and lilies.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white silk marquisette and lace, with a collar of the lace, which also formed panels in the skirt and long train. A row of buttons extended down the front of the bodice, and her veil was of lace and net. She carried a shower bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley.

MRS. LELIA LYNCH was matron of honor, wearing pale yellow silk marquisette and lace made with puffed sleeves and a full skirt. Miss Marjorie V. Smith, the bride's niece, was maid of honor, and the bridesmaids were the Misses Nellie Koontz and Mary Frances O'Connor. Miss Smith's frock was of aqua and the others chose pink and powder blue. Their gowns were fashioned like Mrs. Lynch's, and all carried old-fashioned bouquets.

Little Alice Feak was flower girl, wearing pink marquisette with a matching bonnet and carrying rose petals. Charlton McSwain, of Columbia, S. C., was best man, and the ushers were William S. Downing, jr., of South Orange, N. J.; Sherwood D. Smith, of Miami, and Byron Sorrell, of Hyattsville.

• • • •

A RECEPTION at the Ammann home followed the ceremony. Among the out-of-town guests were Mrs. Drucie McSwain, of Columbia, S. C., and William S. Downing, sr., and Robert Downing, of South Orange.

As her going away costume, the bride chose a blue crepe dress with a white figure and matching coat with a corsage of orchids.

Mrs. Frances Parkinson Keyes Holds Housewarmings in Sections 'A' and 'B'

"Housewarming A" was held yesterday by Mrs. Frances Parkinson Keyes. As her new-old house in Alexandria is too small to accommodate all her friends, she is giving another housewarming (B) next week. She followed the alphabet system in inviting the guests, except in cases where people wouldn't be in town for the first or second party.

Mrs. Keyes has remodeled her house, but the old woodwork and floors and three of the original chandeliers remain. The house was owned at one time by the Janney family—Mrs. Janney was an aunt of the founder of Johns Hopkins University. Later Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Washington made their home there for 15 years after the sale of Mount Vernon. Mrs. Keyes has installed her old furniture and collections of fans and dolls from all over the world.

Hollyhocks in the garden are in full bloom, and were much admired by those who called. The hostess wore a white chiffon dress with a jacket of white lace.

Pouring tea during the afternoon were Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg, Mrs. Hamilton Fish, Mrs. Emmett Gudger, Mrs. Joshua Evans, Mrs. Edwin T. Meredith, Rep. Edith Nourse Rogers, Mrs. J. Fred Essary, Mrs. Charles Drake, Mrs. Arthur Sears Henning and Mrs. Frank Mason Dillard and Mrs. William B. Lowrie, of Alexandria. About 100 guests called.

New England Honeymoon For LoJoconos

Bride, the Former Rita Dorr; Couple To Make Home Here

Mr. and Mrs. Ignatius Joseph LoJocono, who were married June 8, will make their home here after July 1, following an extensive trip through the New England States.

The bride is the former Miss Rita A. Dorr, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. August Philip Dorr, and Mr. LoJocono is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter LoJocono.

The couple were married at the Holy Name Church, the Rev. John W. Dowling officiating. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of net with lace panels over white satin. Her veil of net and lace fell from a coronet of seed pearls, and she carried a mother-of-pearl prayer book with a white orchid and a shower of lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Harry Sweitzer, her sister, was matron of honor, wearing pale pink with a matching poke bonnet. The bridesmaids were Mrs. George Upperman, Mrs. Edward Benjamin, Mrs. William McMahan and Miss Florence Roach, all of whom wore delft blue frocks with bonnets and net gloves of the same shade.

Leo LoJocono was best man for his brother, and the ushers were James Dorr, brother of the bride, John Cifala, nephew of Mr. LoJocono, Louis Anzelmo and Harry Sweitzer.

Weddings Hold Stage At Annapolis

Mrs. Rachel Glann Becomes Bride Of R. C. Needham

Annapolis, Md., June 15.—Before settling down to the tranquility of midsummer, or making plans for vacation trips, Annapolis society this week took time out for several more weddings and engagement parties.

In a small, informal wedding this afternoon, Mrs. Rachel Blythe Glann and Commander Ralph Cutler Needham, U. S. N., (retired), were married in St. Andrew's Chapel, Naval Academy, with Chaplain William N. Thomas officiating. The wedding was attended only by relatives and close friends of the bride and bridegroom.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Needham, Commander Needham's brother and sister-in-law, and Harry Blythe, Mrs. Glann's brother, were the only attendants.

Prof. J. W. Crosley played the wedding marches on the organ.

After a wedding trip, they will make their home in Annapolis, Commander Needham having been recalled to active duty at the Naval Academy.

MR. AND MRS. Merle Robert Dawson announce the marriage of Mrs. Dawson's daughter, Miss Anne Lee Clark, to Frank Adair, which took place recently in the rectory of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church here. The Rev. Father Thomas Fallon performed the ceremony.

The bride's father was the late Garnett Y. Clark, of Howard County. Mrs. Adair is the sister of Garnett Y. Clark, jr., and Miss Nancy Ellicott Clark, of 35 Southgate avenue, Annapolis.

Mr. Adair is the son of Mrs. Charles Adair and the late Mr. Adair, of San Bernardino, Calif. His brother, Lieut. Charles Adair, is now on duty at the Naval Academy.

Mr. and Mrs. Adair are occupying their new home, which has just been completed on the old Georgetown road, Bethesda.

MISS HELEN FRANCES Ephraim, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry T. Ephraim, has sailed for Honolulu, where she will be married to Ensign James Herbert Ray.

The granddaughter of Mrs. M. Fiesseler, 17 Cathedral street, Miss Ephraim spent her childhood in Annapolis. After a series of farewell parties, she left here recently for Los Angeles, on the first lap of her trip to Hawaii.

Ensign Ray, son of Commander Herbert J. Ray, U. S. N., and Mrs. Betty Patterson, of Honolulu, is stationed on the U. S. S. Jarvis. He and his bride will make their home in Hawaii for the remainder of the year.

JAMES G. O'NEILL, of this city, has announced the marriage of his daughter, Geraldine Anne, to Ensign Robert W. Carter, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Carter, of Grand Forks, N. D. They will live in Arlington, Va.

Miss Lorraine Lewis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lewis, of Annapolis, and Ensign William M. Laughlin, jr., were married this week in Puerto Rico, where the bridegroom is stationed.

Lieut. and Mrs. J. H. Morse announce the birth of a daughter, June 5, at the Emergency Hospital here.

THE NAVAL ACADEMY Garden Club held its final meeting of the year Tuesday at the Naval Academy Gold Clubhouse.

Lieut.-Comdr. and Mrs. S. D. Truesdal, of Long Beach, Calif., have been visiting Commander and Mrs. W. A. Teasley at their home here.

Mrs. Homer H. Nielsen and her daughter spent this week visiting Lieut. and Mrs. Wallace J. Miller in Annapolis on their way from New York to the West Coast where they will join Lieut. Nielsen.

AFTER A FEW WEEKS on the West Coast, the Nielsen family will return here, Lieut. Nielsen having been ordered to the Postgraduate School.

Miss Beatrice James left Monday morning to drive across the country with Mrs. Stuart Kennedy, whose son, William C. Bryan, graduated last week from the Naval Academy.

Mrs. T. A. Torgerson, wife of Lieut. Torgerson, U. S. N., is visiting her parents, Judge and Mrs. Ridgely P. Melvin, at their home, Aberdeen, on South River.

Lieut. Torgerson is on duty on the U. S. S. Wichita, which left Norfolk last Friday for South American waters.

Miss Niller To Be Bride Of Dr. Moore

Mrs. William Niller announces the engagement of her daughter, Miss Houston Westbrook Niller, to Dr. Moore Moore, jr., son of Dr. and Mrs. Moore Moore, of Memphis, Tenn.

The wedding will take place in Christ Church in Alexandria on Saturday, July 6. The prospective bride, who made her debut in Washington and in Memphis in 1938, attended Holton-Arms. She was graduated from the Semple School in New York City.

Dr. Moore was graduated from the University of Tennessee.

Tea Features Takoma Park Social Life

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Castle Entertain This Afternoon

Takoma Park, Md., June 15.—Leading the social events in the Takoma Park-Silver Spring area is the tea to be given this afternoon from 3 until 5 o'clock by Mr. and Mrs. Ira Castles, of Sligo Park Hills at their home on Park Crest Drive.

They are giving the party in honor of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Sherrill and the latter's sister, Mrs. Richard Hoxie who have recently come to Washington from Miami, Fla.

Mrs. George Wythe, of Arlington, Va., will describe her recent trip to South Africa and Dr. William Allen Wilbur, former dean of George Washington University, will speak informally before a musical program is presented.

Presiding at the tea table will be Miss Mabel Hiatt, of Washington. Mrs. Castles will be assisted by her mother, Mrs. S. M. Deffinbaugh, of Silver Spring.

ANOTHER IMPORTANT PARTY was the picnic luncheon given in the garden of Mrs. A. G. Stone, of Woodside Parkway, Silver Spring, Thursday, in honor of Mrs. Walter M. Peacock, of Takoma Park, who will soon give up her residence on Baltimore avenue and move to Deerfield, N. J.

Most of the guests were members of the choral group of the Takoma Park Women's club, of which Mrs. Peacock is a member.

Food and Drug Division Set to Curb Cheating In War Emergency, Kappa Beta Pi Told Here

Ruth DeForest Lamb Tells Practices That Might Be Attempted

By Jessie Ash Arndt
The Post Club Editor.

The Food and Drug Administration is prepared to cooperate with other Government agencies in the suppression of snide practices likely to be attempted during a war emergency, Miss Ruth deForest Lamb told members of Kappa Beta Pi at their convention banquet last night. The affair, held at the Mayflower Hotel, concluded the annual convention of Province 2 of the international legal sorority.

Miss Lamb, author of "The American Chamber of Horrors," discussed the enforcement of the new Food and Drug Act and the part it will be ready to play in curbing such practices as thrived during the last World War. She had with her candy boxes with false bottoms, bottles that were tall and thin but held only half as much as short round ones, and large cartons which misled the public as to the amount of their contents.

"There is always a lot of flag-waving to disguise fraudulent practices at a time like this," said Miss Lamb.

Already she said, a company manufacturing gelatine desserts is declaring that, at a time when the Government needs all possible machinery for defense production, the Food and Drug Administration wants it to scrap its packaging equipment—"But we don't," said Miss Lamb. "Our only requirement is that the packages be filled so that the amount they contain approximates the size of the boxes in which they are sold."

The Administration also will assist in checking sabotage such as occurred in the last war, when such things were discovered as salmon cans filled with salt and with rags.

She told of the seizures of harmful cosmetics and reducing remedies as soon as the new Food and Drug Act went into effect. A coal tar product, manufactured by a woman in California, who was a former United States Attorney, was the most notorious of eyelash dyes. One woman lost her sight and another died as a result of the use of it. The woman who manufactured it was indicted on 23 counts but was fined only $100 on each of them, said Miss Lamb, and the court released her on the payment of but $250 of this amount.

A reducing preparation, "which had been killing people since Dr. Harvey W. Wiley's time," was seized promptly. There were also dintrophenol products, sold under various trade names, containing the same substances used in T. N. T., and which literally cooked the tissues.

The public hearings provided for by the act in connection with certification of drugs, have brought remarkable response from the consumers who attend them and take part in the spirit of the old Massachusets Town meetings, Miss Lamb declared.

She was introduced by Miss Anna Moulton, province dean, who acted as the toastmistress at the banquet. Miss Moulton, earlier in the day, was elected director of Province 2 to succeed Miss Marguerite Rawalt, Florence McGee, a member of Epsilon Chapter, at Washington College of Law, was named the province representative on the national nominating committee. The five other provinces over the country also will name representatives. The seventh province is the Paris Chapter, of which Mme. Juliette Veillier-Duray is head, and which has been active in our work ever since European hostilities began.

The three national officers who were present at the banquet were Miss Elizabeth F. Reed, grand dean; Mrs. Grace Brown Stiles, grand registrar, and Miss Rawalt, province director.

Miss Moulton, as province dean, presided at the business sessions, with Miss Beatrice Clephane as parliamentarian and Miss Elizabeth Salisbury, province secretary. There was discussion of the proposal to establish a chapter house here and possibly offer it as a national headquarters, and also of the 1941 convention in White Sulphur Spring, W. Va., at which Province 2 will be hostess.

Presiding yesterday at the annual convention of Province 2 of Kappa Beta Pi, international legal sorority, at the Mayflower Hotel, was Miss Anna Moulton (right), who is photographed with Miss Mary Connolly, dean of Eta alumnae chapter and Miss Elizabeth Salisbury, of Epsilon chapter, convention secretary

'Alliance to Give Awards Tuesday

The Housekeepers' Alliance will meet Tuesday in the fourth floor assembly room of the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K streets northwest, at 2 p. m., with Mrs. Mary T. Bannerman, national legislative chairman of the motion-picture council, as the principal speaker. Annual reports from the Milwaukee Council meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs will be given.

Mrs. Henry Morton Phillips announces as hostesses Mrs. Bannerman, Alliance motion-picture chairman, and Mrs. Frank M. Shortall, of the ways and means department.

Special awards will be given to Mrs. Caroline B. McCallum for over 500 hours devoted to Red Cross work, and to Miss Abby Johnson for her part at the last jubilee card party, which netted a substantial sum for the General Federation fund and reimbursed the charity fund of the Alliance treasury by an equal amount.

The chairman of the Red Cross Unit of the Alliance is the president, Mrs. Frederic Newburgh. Members have served at the booths, in the production section and at the Chapter House, on surgical dressings.

G.O.P. Conclave Women to Carry On for Red Cross

Intensive Red Cross work carried on by thousands of Republican women in their home branches will not be interrupted by their attendance at the convention next week in Philadelphia. A special Red Cross booth is to be established in the Academy of Music headquarters, where bandages, garments and yarn will be available for workers. Microphones carrying the proceedings of the convention will be set up in the academy foyer and Red Cross war work will proceed as speeches and roll calls are "the order of the day" in the convention hall some 20 blocks away.

The convention entertainment schedule mapped out by Mrs. Worthington Scranton, vice chairman of the Republican National Committee and convention hostess, includes a dinner to the women delegates and alternates Tuesday night, June 25; preceding the celebrated Mummers' parade; tours to Valley Forge, teas by various women's organizations. The committee is providing hostesses in each hotel, a motor corps of 200 automobiles and arranging "open house" in numerous clubs and in historic homes in Fairmount Park. Nine information booths in the Academy of Music headquarters will have qualified attendants to answer every conceivable question. Convention visitors will be accorded admission to a score of beautiful gardens in Philadelphia and its environs.

Approximately 300 women will serve as delegates and alternates to the convention, Miss Marion E. Martin, of Bangor, Me., assistant chairman of the Republican National Committee, announced today on the eve of her departure for Philadelphia. The first session opens at 11 a. m. Monday, June 24. Preliminary lists of delegates indicate a gain of women's delegates representation over 1936 from California, Connecticut, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Nebraska, New York, North Dakota and Texas.

Miss Martin and other women members of the national committee will comprise the vanguard of prominent women who arrive in Philadelphia for the national committee meeting on Wednesday. Headquarters of the women's division, of which Miss Martin is director, will be established in the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel.

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne

Everyone in Washington knows Dr. Hans Kindler, conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra and newly elected president of the Arts Club, but many have not had opportunity to know Mrs. Kindler and her talents.

The other day I saw her at a tea, and no one would have suspected when she and Dr. Kindler arrived, that they had finished up a day of "farm work" before coming. The only evidence was a healthy sunburn on the conductor's face, which most men would have had to admit was acquired on the golf course. Not so with Dr. Kindler. His was the reward for picking, with the help of his son, 29 pounds of strawberries, grown on their 200-year-old place in Howard County, Md., on the middle Pawtuxent River. Mrs. Kindler had been at work inside, making jam, and had 15 quarts put up before she started for the tea party.

It is not to be inferred from this that preserving is her chief interest, nor strawberry-picking Dr. Kindler's main diversion, but homely domestic pursuits have a definite place in their scheme of things. And I have no doubt Dr. Kindler holds up an extra large berry when he finds one with much the same gesture with which he lifts his baton. Whether the "down beat" lands the berry in his mouth is not recorded, but Mrs. Kindler does not require her pickers to whistle as they work, so it's possible that not all of the berries are accounted for when the baskets are brought in.

And now, about the house itself—this is where Mrs. Kindler's real genius appears. She is, of course, an artist whose oils have been shown both in this country and abroad. One of her pictures is in the permanent collection of the Philadelphia Art Museum.

She planned the entire restoration of the house and supervised the workmen as they did the job. Tearing out the plaster in the old living room, they found considerable lost space behind it. Making use of this, she had a mirror and bookcases set in the center and located some quaint panel shutters in an old house being torn down in Baltimore, which she used as doors for little closets at the sides.

In the library adjoining they found real hand-split oak beams and lath. She had the old lath waxed and left for the back of the bookcases. The window frames, set back in the deep stone walls, she also had scraped and waxed. These were of white pine which used to grow in abundance in that region. The room has six windows, a huge old fireplace and white pine floors, with wide boards. The dining room has its original beamed ceiling and wooden panels forming the walls.

Mrs. Kindler started the restoration of the place three years ago and has given expression to her artistic talents in this rather than in painting. Now that it is finished she expects to devote some of her time to her canvases.

Incidentally, the kitchen is big enough for all the work that comes at butchering season—for pigs as well as chickens are raised by these enterprising artist and musician "farmers."

Arts Club members are as proud of their new president's wife as of their president, and despite her home interests she takes time for participation in club activities.

Statement of Policy Suggests Feminine Leaders Help Safeguard American Way Of Life by Creating Intelligent Opinion

A credo for college-trained women in these times, by the American Association of University Women, including the ideas that are the essence of the American way of life and that must be safeguarded by all loyal citizens.

Drafted by the A. A. U. W. Headquarters staff, the statement of a working policy in the emergency situation created by the European war stresses the need to assist the schools as the American institution which in all of its activities is crucial to the ideational preservation of the Nation, and cites two special fields of endeavor. The association is urged to be alert to price movements. As a group seeking recognition for trained women, the statement reads—"we can contribute to the strength of emergency and long-time agencies by seeing to it that the leadership of able women is utilized in their governing bodies. Qualified, university trained women can contribute much to wise planning and efficient administration."

Already A. A. U. W. has taken a stand on civil liberties by protesting to every member of Congress the amendments against aliens added to the La Follette Civil Liberties bill as it passed the Senate.

Of interest in connection with the statement on utilizing the leadership of trained women is the appointment by President Roosevelt of Miss Harriet Elliott to the advisory commission of the National Defense Council as its consumer member. Miss Elliott is the A. A. U. W. chairman of the legislative program.

This statement of organization policy, which will go to every member of the Nation-wide organization through the June issue of the Journal of the American Association of University Women, says in part:

"Our groups have a serious obligation to study the course of events and help to create an intelligent public attitude which will discriminate between the sacrifices necessary for unified action and the excesses of hysteria.

"We know that this country must fit itself for a world in which military strength becomes a first consideration. At the same time we cannot be indifferent to the sufferings of thousands of people, we feel a special concern for the university women who are victims of war and Nazi terrorism."

Weddings of Interest in Washington

Pickens—Kitchens

IN A CEREMONY last evening at the Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, Miss Gladys Kitchens, only daughter of Representative and Mrs. Wade H. Kitchens, became the bride of John Kenneth Pickens, son of Mrs. John K. Pickens, of Cortland, N. Y.

Relatives and close friends of the families witnessed the wedding which took place at 7 o'clock with the Rev. James Shera Montgomery, chaplain of the House of Representatives officiating.

The chancel of the church was massed with white carnations and snapdragons, peonies and palms. White candles burned in graduated candelabra. Preceding the ceremony, Mrs. James Shera Montgomery, organist, played a program of wedding music, including the traditional wedding marches.

The wedding procession was led by the ushers, Jerry Griffis, George Parsons, Tommy Dowd, Charles Wallace, Jack Dishman and Theodore Pierson, all of Washington.

MISS MARY ALICE ARNOLD, daughter of Judge and Mrs. William W. Arnold, of Robinson, Ill., and this city, was the maid of honor and only attendant. She wore a floor length dress of stardust blue marquisette, fashioned with a full skirt, high neck line, and short puffed sleeves. shoulder-length veil to match was fastened with a single pink orchid. She carried a bouquet of pink peonies, and baby's breath. Ralph Fisher, of Iowa and Washington, was best man.

The bride was escorted to the altar by her father who gave her in marriage. She was gowned in blush pink satin, made with a basque waist, high scalloped neckline with Elizabethan collar, leg-o-mutton sleeves, and a very full skirt terminating in a three-yard train. Her veil of illusion was held to her head by a coronet of orange blossoms, the veil of two lengths, one finger-tip and the other extending beyond the train of her dress. For something old she carried a linen handkerchief edged in Rosepoint lace, which her father had sent her from France during the World War. She wore a necklace of pearls, and carried a shower bouquet of orchids, gardenias and lilies of the valley.

A RECEPTION for the wedding guests followed at the Wardman Park Hotel in the Madison Suite. Representative and Mrs. Kitchens and Mrs. Pickens received with the bride and groom, maid of honor and best man. Mrs. Kitchens was gowned in a floor-length dress of pink marquisette, topped with a jacket of silk braid. She wore orchids at the shoulder. Mrs. Pickens wore a dress of blue marquisette, and she too had a corsage of orchids.

Harlan—Wetmore

DECKED WITH FERNS, candles and vases of lilies, All Soul's Memorial Unitarian Church was the scene of the marriage of Miss Margaret Fenwick Wetmore and John Graydon Harlan, jr. The ceremony took place at 4 o'clock yesterday with the Rev. Ulysses Pierce officiating. The bride is the daughter of Dr. Alexander Wetmore, of Smithsonian Institution, and Mrs. Wetmore, of Takoma Park. Mr. Harlan is the son of John G. Harlan.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore an ivory taffeta gown. Her full length veil fell simply from sprays of orange blossoms. She wore a string of pearls, a gift from the bridegroom, and a diamond four-leaf clover brooch worn by her mother on her wedding day. Her bouquet was of canterbury bells, gladioli and larkspur.

MISS ANN HARLAN, wearing an aqua taffeta gown, served as maid of honor. She wore a matching tulle hat and carried canterbury bells, gladioli and larkspur in various colors.

The bridesmaid was Miss Eleanor Marty, of Pottsville, Pa., who wore a peach taffeta frock, with a matching tulle hat, and carried a bouquet similar to that of the maid of honor. Both dresses were made with sweetheart necklines, short sleeves and bouffant skirts.

Robert Harlan, brother of the bridegroom, served as best man and ushers were Phillip Fairchild, Floyd Parrish, Lewis Kirkpatrick, Fred Youngblood, George Walter and Dan Harlan.

THE GARDEN OF the home of Mrs. B. H. Swalis on Albermarle street was the scene of a reception following the ceremony. Mrs. Wetmore, who received with the couple, wore an orchid lace and marquisette ensemble with a corsage of orchids. Also receiving was Mrs. Harlan, who was garbed in a rose marquisette gown with a corsage of orchids.

When the couple left for their wedding trip the bride wore an aqua gabar-line suit. They will make their home in Washington upon their return.

Mrs. Vernon Lowrey To Entertain Today

Mrs. Vernon Lowrey will entertain this morning at 11 o'clock at her home 3630 Prospect avenue, in Georgetown, in honor of Miss Jane Collins, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Ross Collins, whose marriage to Thomas Corwin will take place on June 26.

Brides of the Summer Season

Mrs. William Francis Betts (upper right circle) is the former Miss Janet Cringan Hale, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Henry Hale, whose wedding took place recently in Florida. Mr. Betts is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Leon Meredith Betts of Chevy Chase. Center is Mrs. Richard Morton Hunt, the former Miss Bertha Mary Langford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Beauregard Langford, of Washington. The couple are making their home in Raleigh, N. C., where Mr. Hunt is on the editorial staff of the News and Observer. At far right center is Mrs. Laurence Ernest Kerley, who was before her marriage on June 1, Miss Dorothy Ann Rivers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tomlinson Rivers, of Savannah, Ga.

SEAFARING SLACKS—they put out to sea or pretend at a bit of sailing, fishing or land-lubbing about the Potomac waterfront. The ones at left, worn by light-hearted Trudy Gay, of this city, are of gray and yellow spun rayon, washable, moderately priced and a good basic starter for casual slack suit collectors. The striped blouse repeats the color of the slacks and tosses in a few more for good measure. This outfit is built for wear as well as for appearance.

How to Look Smart in Slacks

By Marshall Adams
The Post Fashion Editor.

MARSHALL ADAMS

THE SLACK SEASON is anything but slack this year what with women becoming more casual in dress, slacks now being cut and tailored to conform to feminine curves, and less eccentricity going into slack styling.

There are still many women deluding themselves, however, that they can and will wear slacks even though their torsos were made for skirts alone. So, since this month is the "high season" for slacks, a few suggestions on selection and wearing of them might sit well with those who haven't yet included a pair in vacation or play time wardrobes.

There are rules which apply even to wearers with perfect figures who can normally put anything on their backs and look like movie queens. Most important is the fact that slacks are functionally comfortable leisure clothes and never look right with high heels, elaborate hairdress, or a drawing room manner.

Even "patio" or evening slacks, (which incidentally have not taken the general public's heart by storm as their California originators predicted), look self conscious when dressed up with ornate jewels or theatrical makeup. As most men put it—"A woman looks excusable in slacks only when she is completely and naturally relaxed."

Avoid Self Consciousness In Slacks

Almost as bad as being over-fastidious in slack wearing is not being fastidious at all. "Cute" girls with limber figures are worst offenders here, what with affectations of boyish awkwardness, hand-ever-in-hip-pocket and sitting with feet propped high on tables to exhibit how lean their shanks or hiplines are.

Even self-conscious slack wearing is forgivable in comparison to the mistakes usually made in selecting slacks to suit one's type. Sportswear buyers are experts in helping "problem" figures find their way into the right slack suit and here is their advice:

If you're over size 20 try to forget you ever heard of slacks. If you're a 44, however, and must be comfortable" while gardening or lounging, remember to get trousers loose enough at the crotch. Since all slacks are cut with deeper crotches this year, as well as with longer back darts and more fullness through the thighs, there is little chance for "binding through the seat." Never kid yourself about your size. A good slack runs the same as a good dress in size. If inclined to fattiness, never wear slacks pulled tight at the waist. That doesn't give you a tiny waistline—it only draws attention to hip bulges or bulbous thighs. By the same token, tight blouses or shirts attract the eye to fulsome bust lines.

Jackets Are Kind

The three quarter length jacket in solid toned spun or the popular shan-bar (similiar to shantung) is a God-send to bulky figures but even the concealing jacket can be revealing if it barely grazes the thigh instead of covering it. The woman of small stature must never wear anything, however, but boleros or crisp short jackets with slacks as the hip length ones cut her height.

Too much "business" (that is too much drapery or fussiness) draws the eyer around the figure instead of up and down, just as does an oversized hat and mammoth slack accessories. The larger slacks wearer should always chose turbans, shoes and belts with care, making sure they are simple, neat, and in scale with her own build.

Slacks with soft fullness are best for the thin woman. Tight, revealing lines must be shunned if hip bones protrude as the victim will look inches taller, pounds thinner in unrelieved lines. Bell bottomed trousers, smocked waistlines, softly squared-off shoulders are flattering as are details like button-high collars, long, loose sleeves and softly draped pockets. The gypsy sash, corselette waistline and flowing sleeves are also boons to the thin girl, provided she does not permit them to become exaggerated parts of her slack silhouette.

PATIO PANTS—The dinner or late Sunday afternoon slack suit which film stars have gone overboard for is shown above on Olivia De Havilland. A local store has this costume in slenderizing acetate jersey—yellow for the blouse, pimento for the sash, aqua for the enormous trousers.

COUNTRY COUSIN OVERALLS—One of the most popular of all trousered play suits is the denim overall, sturdy, livable and at last, cut along higher-waisted, longer-gusseted lines for greater figure flattery. The color of these overalls is faded blue, the shirt, a red bandanna.

AHOY FOR MIDDY SLACKS—A three-piece playtime suit is shown at top right and immediately above in two versions. The first one for the girl with hips which need the flattery of concealing denim middy and casual slacks, the other for the girl of hipless proportions who can "get away" with short slacks.

Nation Yeomen Hold Luncheon At Harrington

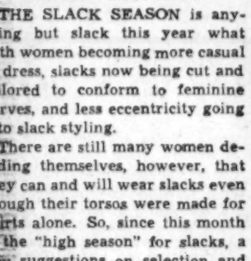
A luncheon was held yesterday afternoon at the Harrington Hotel by the National Yeomen F, an organization composed solely of women who served as Yeoman (f) in the United States Naval Reserve force in the World War. This organization was formed in 1926 to commemorate the work of women who served in the United States Navy in the World War.

In 1936 the organization was granted a national charter by the Congress of the United States and treasures as one of its most prized possessions the pen with which President Roosevelt signed the bill.

Members of the National Yeoman F attended the luncheon, as well as many former yeoman (f) now residing in Washington.

Miss Charlotte L. Berry, of Washington, national commander, presided and Miss Helen G. O'Neill, past national commander, was toastmistress. Other national officers present were Mrs. Esther H. Beckett, treasurer; Miss Mabel F. Staub, adjutant; Mrs. Ann Frame, membership officer.

Among the honored guests were Mrs. Edna P. Smith, commander of the U. S. S. Jacob Jones Post, of the American Legion. Mrs. Mary E. Kolhos was chairman of the affair and Miss Mary Marston furnished the entertainment.



Mary Haworth's Mail

Because She Failed in Shorthand at Night School, Girl's Parents Would Send Her to Business College; How Persuade Them It Would Be Wasted Effort?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a high school graduate, and while in high school I took a mixed course and didn't really prepare myself for anything definite in life, because, like so many others, I hadn't the slightest idea what I was cut out to be. After graduation, though, I did find a job which was to my liking, but which was not at all related to any courses I had taken in school.

At my parents' behest, I have enrolled in night school for a business course. I like typing very much but I honestly dislike shorthand, and no matter how hard I study, I just can't get it; and my parents can't seem to understand that it is not a subject for anybody and everybody. Now, they are insisting that I go to business college and learn shorthand thoroughly. I can't convince them how utterly useless this would be. They would be wasting their money and my time and energies in a fruitless project.

Frankly, I still don't know what I want to do. But I do know definitely that whatever it is, it will have nothing whatsoever to do with shorthand. I've solicited suggestions and advice from friends on how to win my parents over to my viewpoint, but they're set on my mastering shorthand. Is there any possible way I can make them see my side of things? (All my life, I've insisted that if you can't help yourself no one else can. But now I'm obliged to change my mind and ask you to help me.)

NANCY.

Never Pays to Neglect Educational Opportunity

DEAR NANCY: Getting ahead, making one's mark, being a success, functioning in the role of useful citizen never is achieved by waiting for a signal from heaven as to what one is, or was, "cut out to be." Most people start their personal success story by doing efficiently the thing that comes to hand by embracing whatever opportunities for learning and self development come their way. As someone has said, "The journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step."

I understand your discouragement with shorthand, but I have no advocate's sympathy with it. When I was in high school, it so happened that one of the courses I chanced to take—for no "planned-life" reason—included typing, shorthand, bookkeeping, etc. I believe it was known as a "commercial" course. I imagine no well intentioned student ever kept a messier set of books—with more blots, erasures, wrong totals, variegated specimens of chirography, etc., but, in the words of Kitty Foyle, "I was in there pitching." And it was the same with typewriting and shorthand.

Intricacies of Shorthand Can Be Mastered, Finally

I doubt if, in the months (or was it years?) that I struggled for mastery of the so-called "touch system" of typewriting, I ever achieved a flawless document to hand in to teacher. And as for shorthand (we studied the Gregg manual), those strange hieroglyphics managed to keep, to the bitter end, the secret of their essential consistency (if any) from me. (What it boils down to, I fancy, is sheer memory work and implacable practice).

But after a time, I was able to keep apace of the average dictation, making (when Gregg's symbols eluded me) ciphers of my own that held meaning for me. And the hard won accomplishment has stood me in good stead ever since—and never more so than when, as a reporter, I was sometimes assigned to cover long-winded speeches and get "quote" interviews.

(Aside, let me say that in recent years I myself am occasionally interviewed by student reporters, who seem to think—or who are taught to believe—that the mark of the professional is not to take notes. So they proudly don't take notes; and, as would naturally follow, their reputed facts and quotes are always balled up. I'm not saying you have to be a shorthand expert to be an accurate journalist; but some note taking is necessary; and the more exact while less labored your efforts, the better for all concerned).

But to return to the main theme: For years, vocational guidance authorities have been saying—and citing examples to prove—that a workmanlike knowledge of typing PLUS shorthand is the best of all job guarantees for a girl. It can be ization might never provide, since there is always an inescapable amount of secretarial "dirty work" to be done in every scientific, artistic, academic, commercial or craft enterprise. And once in, she has enviable opportunity for forging as far ahead, along specialized lines, as her talent, ambition and industry can take her.

Moreover, the best preparation for success in any field is training in self discipline and indefatigable application. And the girl who balks at studying shorthand just because it doesn't come easily to her is a little too soft to make much of a mark in the world of affairs. If ever she amounts to anything, in some field of specialization, she is going to have to tackle, and get the upperhand of, incomparably more difficult assignments than this tedious subject.

Take Goods Gods Provide; Fight Obstacles to a Finish

So, my advice to you is to take the goods the gods would provide, in this business college course your hard headed parents are unsympathetically urging. Let shorthand lick you, and you will be forever worse for the defeat. But fight it to a finish in which you are technically and morally the victor, and you will experience an everlasting psychological and social profit. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Y. W. Workshops Start Tomorrow

Beginning tomorrow the Y. W. C. A. will sponsor summer workshops for business and professional girls. Meeting each Monday and Thursday from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m., the workshops will offer work in crafts, music and radio technique.

On the committee in charge are: Dorothy Wurtsbaugh and Elsie Salomon, of the Blue Triangle Club, Eleanor Wagar, of the Xenos Club, and Lillian Alt, of the Elizabeth Somer's Glee Club.

There will be work in clay, wood and cork and an hour of great composers, followed by an hour of choral singing, the writing of radio scripts and the techniques of production and dramatization.

Registrations for the workshop may be made in the business girls' department of the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K streets.

Many Home Lovers Visit Display House

Post Presentation Is in Attractive Neighborhood

In distinguished surroundings, the new Washington Post Display Home has been a center of attraction for a host of house lovers in the last week. Situated at 3505 Fulton street in the Massachusetts Avenue Heights neighborhood, this presentation dwelling has been erected by Charles Sturbitts, noted Washington builder, designed by Joseph H. Abel, furnished by Hilda N. Miller and is offered by Boss & Phelps, realtors.

Constructed on a broad, tree-shaded lot, the show residence of brick construction and colonial type architecture, faces a Government park, which insures a permanent natural wooded outlook for its owner. Sturbitts will give to the eventual purchaser a value secured through years of experience in constructing fine dwellings; including study of what is most suitable in floor planning, livable in room arrangement, lasting in materials and modern in equipment.

His product as exemplified by this exhibit house represents years of finding what is best to use and how to employ it to best advantage and highest satisfaction of the buyer. The house reflects the most substantial in materials and greatest skill in their assembly at least cost to the purchaser.

Home Sales at 3-Year Peak

New house sales in Washington during the first five months of the current year continued to maintain their lead over corresponding periods of the past three years, according to a June preliminary survey of Washington Business Review. New residential sales from January through May this year, numbered 880, as compared with 792, in 1939; 743, in 1938, and 653, in 1937.

As an example of steady sales activity in the metropolitan area, the Sycamore Hill (Md.) development of Standard Properties, is cited. First and only announcement of this, one of the extra low cost housing projects under terms of Title I, Class 3, of the Federal Housing Administration, was made in The Washington Post last Sunday when a single model home was shown. As a result, contracts for construction of 45 houses completing the entire development tract were secured in less than a week.

FHA Home Building Keeps Up Record-Breaking Level in May

For Second Consecutive Month, Applications For Mortgage Insurance on New Houses Tops $100,000,000, Stewart McDonald Says

Home building under the FHA program went forward at record-breaking level during May and for the second consecutive month new-home applications for FHA mortgage insurance exceeded $100,000,000, Federal Housing Administrator Stewart McDonald announces.

Applications involving new homes to be built under FHA inspection were far ahead of last year, the number showing a gain of better than 40 per cent and the amount a gain of about 33 per cent.

A total of 22,053 mortgages amounting to $101,217,472 were selected for appraisal by the FHA in May on homes to be built under its inspection, Mr. McDonald said. This was slightly larger in amount and a few less in number than the April figures of 22,092 mortgages in the amount of $100,901,774.

May 'Most Active'

May was also the most active month ever recorded under the FHA program for homes started under its inspection, Mr. McDonald said. A weekly average of about 3,800 new small homes being financed under Title II were started in May, compared with about 3,700 in April and about 2,900 in May, 1939.

In two weeks during the month the number of homes started exceeded 4,000 for the first time in the FHA's experience, compared with last year's weekly peak of 3,122. This does not include about 1,000 small homes being financed under Title I.

Undiminished volume of new home applications in May points to continuation of active new-home construction in coming weeks, Mr. McDonald said. New-home applications were about 5,000 or more in every week during May except the last week which included Memorial Day. For 13 out of the last 14 weeks, the administrator reminded, applications involving new homes have exceeded the highest week of 1939.

Reached New High

Total volume of mortgages selected for appraisal under the FHA program, including mortgages on existing structures, also reached a new high in May at $129,184,811. This compared with $128,231,968 in April and $109,442,140 in May, 1939. The peak in 1939, when mortgages on existing structures were well ahead of this year, was reached in March at $121,689,493.

During the first five months of 1940 total mortgages selected for appraisal by the FHA numbered 116,755 in the amount of $526,763,000, compared with 111,092 in the amount of $500,605,000 in the same period of 1939. Mortgages selected for appraisal involving new homes totaled 88,062 for $406,746,000 during the first five months, compared with 71,056 for $339,191,000 in the same period of last year, a gain of 24 per cent in number and 20 per cent in amount.

Westover Hills New Arlington Home Project

Mace Properties, Inc., Building New Houses To Sell Under $5,000

The United States' need for more and better housing facilities has long been a problem with our Government. Many plans have been advanced to provide better shelter for families in the moderate income group—and some progress has been made along these lines.

One of the Capital's first development companies to capitalize on the Federal Housing Administration's insured financing plan, which brought home ownership within the reach of millions who had never before deemed it possible, is Mace Properties, Inc.

Organized about two years ago under the direction of M. A. Mace, this concern has contributed liberally to the recent residential development of the metropolitan area.

The first project undertaken was Glebewood Village, a community of more than 100 group homes in Arlington County, Va. Following completion and sale of this community, the Mace organization built Westmont, a large scale operation comprising 198 duplex type homes.

Then came Westover, the 152-unit Mace apartment development which was immediately followed by Highlands, a 100-home project which was sold out within a few weeks of its opening announcement.

All of the projects were sold or rented in record time, and pursuant to the success of these operations comes the most ambitious building program in Mace Properties' history.

Westover Hills is being announced for the first time today. The community will comprise more than 500 detached brick homes that are being offered on terms less than the average rental through the facilities of FHA and will be completely built and occupied by Christmas, the announcement states.

In this new development, fronting on Washington boulevard in Arlington County, Mace Properties is creating modern, single-family homes to sell at less than $5,000, with payments that aggregate only about $1 per day.

The homes are of brick, concrete and steel construction and contain five rooms of generous size. Living room, dining room and kitchen are on the first floor; two bedrooms and tiled bath on the second, and there is a large basement with ample space for conversion into a recreation room.

Among the features of the houses are oak parquet floors, solid oak

New Color Scheme For Living Room

For a living room with a different color scheme, amethyst is employed in the carpet, and in hangings slightly lighter than the carpet. The walls are painted azure blue, the sofa and chairs beige covered, and the draperies are of red-violet over flesh-color glass curtains. One white chair gives accent, as do accessories of spring green, red-violet, gold and cream.

Summer Floor Design Revived

An old idea for leaving floors bare in summertime and decorating them with paint has been revived. The well-known spatter-dash method is often employed, but in addition, large spirals or loops—even borders—are also applied with paint. One floor, spatter-dashed in greenish gunmetal color, is painted with large ivory colored spirals in pairs. Another interesting device is a double-ended spiral of Mexican design.

Improvements Made In Stalls for Showers

All the plumbing fixtures essential to a bathroom may be located in a space as small as 3 feet square. However, a shower stall may be substituted for a tub in the home that has only a small closet or alcove available for an extra bathroom.

Many improvements have been made in these stalls in recent years, and they are now entirely leakproof. They may be equipped with glass doors if the owner desires.

Windows Should Be Wisely Chosen

Windows for a new home should be selected with regard for the architecture of the home as well as for personal preference.

Tall, narrow windows give the effect of height; broad, low windows will make a house look wider.

The size, shape, and location of windows should be carefully studied. In placing windows, both exterior and interior appearances, as well as practicallity of arrangement, indoors and out, should be considered.

The New York apartment of an eminent beauty specialist successfully combines Victorian decoration with modern. The drawing room is unusual with its white-painted walls and draperies of American Beauty color. Particularly interesting is the low Venetian cabinet made from glass painted with gay and colorful designs. American beauty color appears again on some of the furniture, other pieces are upholstered in purple. The rug is pale citron. Many art objects are displayed about the room.

Kitchen String Box Can Be Attractive

A string holder for the kitchen is made of an ordinary wooden codfish box with sliding lid, painted white or a gay color. For further decoration, a fruit or flower decalcomania is applied to the lid. Bore a small hole in the bottom of the box for the string to emerge, and hang a small pair of scissors from a hook screwed to the side of the box.

Lorcum Hills Prove Popular On Opening Day

Second Sample Home Is Nearing Completion In Arlington Section

Announcement last week of the opening of Lorcum Hills, new home development bordering the route of George Washington Memorial boulevard, has been received with interest, according to Mount Vernon Builders, Inc., builders and developers.

Hundreds of persons visited the exhibit home on North Quincy street, Arlington, on the opening day.

The project was opened with completion of a colonial type home which features spaciousness, an attractive woodland setting and luxurious appointments. A second home is being completed.

The operation is situated near schools, stores and transportation in one of nearby Virginia's heavily wooded, rolling sections. With completion of the Memorial Parkway, residents of this development will be able to drive into downtown Washington through a Government reservation which compares with Rock Creek Park.

To reach Lorcum Hills, drive over Key Bridge, out Lee Highway to Military road, in Cherrydale, right to Lorcum lane, and right to North Quincy street, then right again.

Westover Homes Are Within Easy Reach of Commuters

Homes in Westover development, Alexandria, Va., should appeal especially to personnel of Civil Aeronautics Authority, it is announced by Foxcroft, Inc., developer of the project, since offices of the CAA are planned at the new Gravelly Point Airport, only a few minutes by bus or car from the community.

Homes offered in this subdivision, 15 minutes from downtown Washington and in the 10-cent bus fare zone, contain five and six large rooms, oil burners, tiled baths and showers, plenty of closet space, rock-wool insulation and furred walls. The project is improved with paved streets, concrete alleys and all utilities. Homes are sold from $4,690 with no settlement or title expense to purchasers, it is stated.

Lawn Faucets Handy

Several sill or lawn faucets installed at various points around the house will eliminate the bother of dragging a long hose in order to water the lawn and garden properly.

Indian Spring Fairways Lure Homeseekers

Mass Production Advantages Evoked By Kay Co.

With golfing days at their peak, and cool country beckoning, hundreds of Washington home seekers each week make Indian Spring Club Estates and its distinctive detached homes facing the fairways of this famous old club their objectives.

Building of houses has been compared often to the construction of automobiles, because a house, like a car, lends itself to mass production. Thus, as with the automobile, beauty and utility are improved while costs are reduced.

This in part explains why the homes at Indian Spring Club Estates represent such remarkable values and give the impression of houses costing thousands of dollars more. Added to the benefits of mass production, however, they have the advantages of being created by the skill of a veteran builder—the Kay Development Co.—which made such an outstanding success of Saratoga Village and which is now developing at Indian Spring a community of 400 homes.

A. S. Kay, head of the company, has for years centered his attention and energies on the creation of a type of home that, while providing a maximum of space and grounds, would still come within the reach of families in modest income brackets. In this respect, he has taken a leaf from the book of Henry Ford, who, a generation ago, applied the same logic to the automobile field.

To reach the development drive out Sixteenth street or Georgia avenue to Colesville road, turn right at the traffic light and drive a mile and a half to the Indian Spring Country Club.

Exterior view and floor plans of Washington Post Display Home at 221 Glenwood road, in Edgewood, Md., built and presented by Bowling & Gardiner, developers of that community, and furnished by Virga & Co.

Large Rooms Are Featured In Post Home

Site in Edgewood Offers Numerous City Benefits

The Washington Post Display Home in Edgewood, Md., is one of the largest and most livable houses for the price, now shown in the city or nearby! Open for inspection at 221 Gleenwood road, it is built and offered by Bowling & Gardiner, developers of the section, and furnished by Virga & Co.

Edgewood offers all essentials of residential value. It has an environment refined and secluded, yet convenient to city facilities. Its dwellings are noted for their architectural character, spaciousness, artistic finish and complete equipment. To visit it, go out Wisconsin avenue to the Bank of Bethesda, turn left on Old Georgetown road to Glenwood road and turn left.

The show home contains a comfortable room with large porch at the rear and a convenient coat closet. A spacious and bright dining room is ideal and the modern kitchen is equipped with electric refrigeration and gas range.

Upstairs are three bedrooms and tiled bath. A large linen closet has been placed along the hallway and large closets are installed in each of the bedrooms. Besides these, there is a large amount of storage space available in that portion of the house above the attached garage. Entry to this extra storage room is from the master bedroom. The full basement contains plants for automatic oil and automatic gas water heating.

This community is most outstanding among those in the moderate cost home category in that the architecture of its houses, built on especially spacious lots, presents a wide variety of accepted design and is not confined to sterotyped floor planning or styling. All homes in the community, which is entirely residential and restricted, differ in design, each having its individual floor layout and exterior treatment. Architecture, however, has been controlled in such a way that all residences present a harmonious composite with pleasing perspective.

Vistas here are interesting along the broad central thoroughfare. The development is built in an area of beauty and summer coolness. Launched in an attractive Maryland countryside, the community has become noted for the distinction of its homes and environment.

enduring workmanship, through planning and careful attention to all of those details successfully transforming a house into a home.

It has three exquisitely appointed baths with softly colored tile and glassed-in showers, the latter being one of the latest refinements in equipment. Fixtures are of the finer quality and each bathroom numbers among its most modern appointments, a triple-mirrored cabinet.

On the first floor is a restful room which can serve as den, study or library. It is paneled in walnut, expertly finished and polished to blend with the comfortable charm of the adjacent generously dimensioned living room. Between the well lighted, scientifically planned kitchen and spacious dining room is a systematically arranged appointed butler's pantry, ready for service between the two important sections.

In the first floor layout, provision has also been made for a colorfully tiled, convenient lavatory and a pleasant, screened living porch which gives an entrancing view of the lawn and gardens. Four bedrooms and two complete baths have been apportioned to the second floor where plenty of closet space and a cool open sun deck have also been alloted for the pleasure and comfort of the dweller.

Besides these, visitors to the home will be agreeably surprised at its full height third floor with two additional large bedrooms, more closet space and another bath, equal in quality to those on the first and second floors. Ability of the builder is again evidenced in the completeness of the basement, remarkable for its solid masonry damp-proofed walls, thoroughly waterproofed ce-

Garden Wall Among Features Being Built at Consensus Home

Ground Grading and Lathing Under Way At Post Sponsored Domicile Located At The Hamlet, Md.; Opening Planned

Ground grading, construction of a garden wall and lathing was begun last week on the "Consensus Home," in the Hamlet, Md., being built by the George B. Hatley Co., and sponsored by The Washington Post.

The Post's suggestion published last Sunday, that home seekers inspect this house before lathing and plastering was completed, in order to see what might later be hidden between the walls, was accepted and appreciated by thousands of visitors during the last week. It gave many of these their first opportunity of understanding how and why certain essentials in modern construction methods are now being carried out.

The simplicity and aristry of the garden wall, which is not yet completed at this time, is adding to the beauty of the unusually attractive architectural design. When the lathing and brown coating has been accomplished, spaciousness of all the rooms and closets can be appreciated more. This week and every week during the period of construction, visitors will be welcome at the site and given full information regarding items of equipment and construction by representatives of the company.

The house being constructed was selected as the model plan to meet the requirements of a large majority of local home seekers. A canvas of opinions was conducted by the Hatley Co. and the consensus of these was translated into a single design by the architect. Not only the dimensions and architecture of the house but its appointments and decorative motif, were listed in the replies contributed by thousands whose opinions were solicited. Months passed in the accumulation and tabulation of this vast number of suggestions and weeks were consumed in preparation of the plans.

When it is finished, the "Consensus Home" will be furnished and opened to public visitation, it being planned to hold a formal presentation during the latter weeks of next month. The house may be seen by going out Connecticut avenue beyond Chevy Chase Circle to Leland street, turning right into the Hamlet to Glendale road, thence left one-half block.

Colonial Hues Used For 2-Color Doors

Delightful and interesting effects can be developed by painting paneled doors in two shades. The stiles and rails may be one shade and the panels another, or merely the moldings around the panels can carry the contrasting color.

Doors whose panels are flat without any raised beveled surface in the center may be made very decorative by painting the panel a contrasting color and then planting a narrow molding around where the edge of the beveled plane would ordinarily come; this is painted like the frame of the door and stands out from its darker background. The Colonial colors made popular by the recent rebuilding of Williamsburg, Va., serve nicely for this type of painting.

Floor Must Be Insulated In Cellarless Homes

In houses that have no cellars, it is necessary, of course, to ventilate the space under the first floor. But in winter this is apt to make the floor cold, so insulation should be put under it.

Beaver Board Ideal Material For Insulating Attic Spaces

Anyone who has ever had to venture into the attic of an uninsulated house at midafternoon on a hot summer day knows why roof and top floor ceiling insulation is of primary importance. It is not unusual for uninsulated attics to attain temperatures of 140 degrees and higher.

There are two primary reasons why insulation at these points is essential. The first is that the roof frequently constitutes the largest exposed area, especially in the case of buildings having flat roofs. The second is that materials ordinarily used in roof construction offer little resistance to the passage of heat.

During the summer the roof structure must bear the brunt of the intense heat of the sun. The uninsulated attic becomes a veritable storehouse of heat. In winter heat rises and forces its way through the top floor ceiling, attic and roof.

Insulation may be installed in either the ceiling or in the roof structure, or both. Some heating engineers prefer to divide the insulation between the two. Insulation board is rapidly becoming an accepted standard for this use, because of its economy, convenience of application, and general utility.

Rock Wool Industry Marks Anniversary

Enough Insulation For 200,000 Homes Produced in Year

In a day of steadily-mounting living costs, one industry devoted to lowering the maintenance expense of American homes is celebrating its 100th anniversary. This is the mineral rock wool industry, which last year produced enough insulation to fill the walls of more than 200,000 average-size American homes, according to B. C. Hearn, of Johns-Manville Home Insulation Co., distributors in this area of Johns-Manville rock wool insulation.

Rock wool, a most widely used form of fireproof insulation, and the oldest present-day insulating material, was first made in Wales in 1840. From then, up to 1900, certain European patents relating to the manufacture of mineral wool appeared at long intervals. Except for making ornaments and decorations, however, these processes were only slightly used.

"Here in the United States," said Mr. Hearn, "it was not until 1897 that any real progress was made in using rock wool commercially. In that year, C. C. Hall, steel plant in Alexandria, Ind., and while searching for a suitable fluxing rock for his blast furnace discovered one which could be fiberized into wool and came to be called "wool rock."

Discovery of rock wool led Mr. Hall to found the Banner Rock Products Co., which became a part of Johns-Manville in 1927. Since that time, manufacture and develop of rock wool has been a record of steady progress and growth, until today rock wool is one of the most efficient and widely used insulations in the building industry," said Mr. Hearn.

"Rock wool is made by hitting a thin stream of molten rock with a jet of steam," continued Mr. Hearn. "This spins the white-hot rock into millions of tiny fibers. The fibers "trap" other millions of air cells, and as stationary air is the perfect nonconductor of heat, rock wool becomes one of the best insulating agents known to man.

Conservative architects call rock wool a most substantial contribution to home comfort since the introduction of central heating into English homes in the eighteenth century.

"Experience has shown," Mr. Hearn concluded, "that rock wool insulation installed in the walls of existing homes can save up to 30 per cent of the winter's fuel bill, and helps keep rooms up to 15 degrees cooler on the hottest summer days. This insulation can be blown into the walls of homes under pneumatic pressure completely and evenly filling the wall spaces, with little or no inconvenience to the residents of the home."

Bathroom Closets Should Be Shallow

Frequently a space is available in a bathroom to build in shelves for a large medicine cabinet. But don't make the mistake of building them deep, for where bottles and jars of various shapes and sizes are placed one behind another in several rows it is always the one in back that is wanted, and then there is first the difficulty of finding it and next the trouble of getting it out without upsetting several others.

Shallow shelves with the distance between graduated to accommodate different height bottles are most useful and convenient.

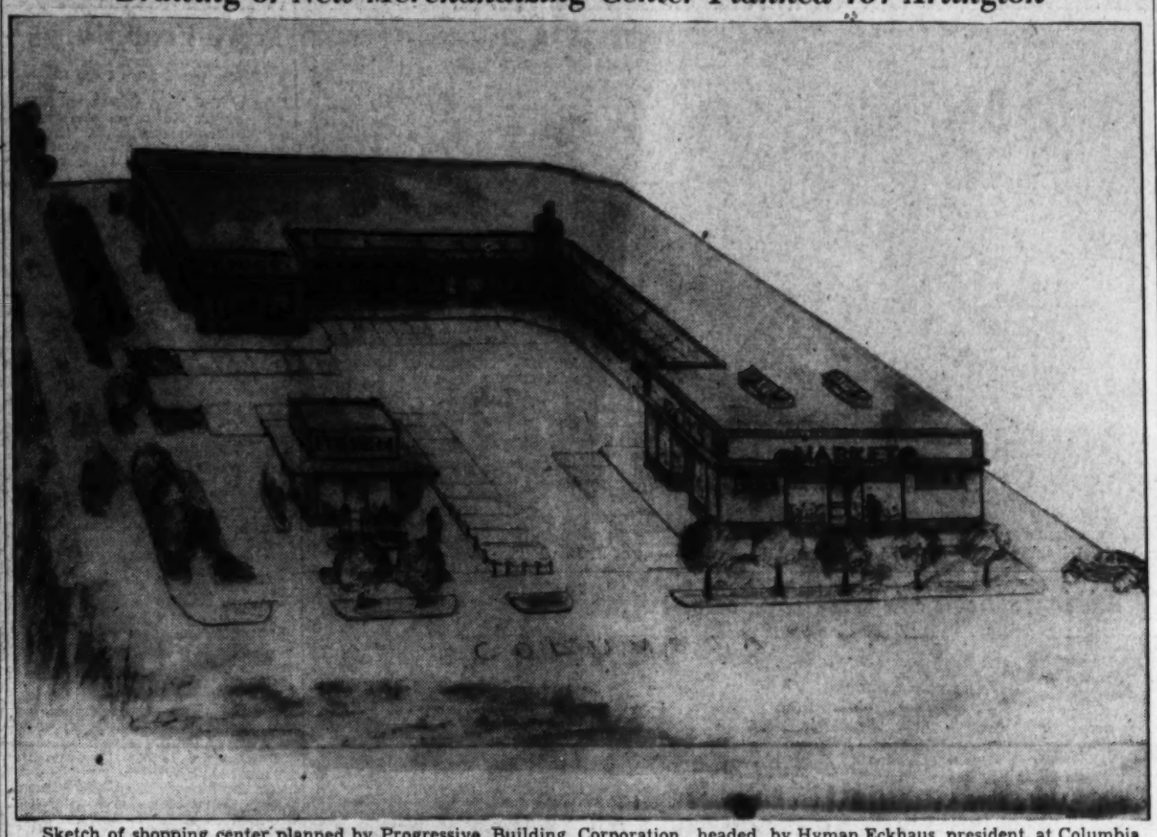
Drawing of New Merchandizing Center Planned for Arlington



Sketch of shopping center planned by Progressive Building Corporation, headed by Hyman Eckhaus, president, at Columbia pike and Glebe road, Arlington, Va. The building is designed by E. J. Conner and Kelley, Steele & Branner will be leasing agents for it

New Arlington Shopping Center To Cost $250,000 Ready Oct. 1

Another shopping center is scheduled for Arlington, Va. Progressive Building Corporation, headed by Hyman Eckhaus, president, has purchased as the site more than 90,000 square feet at the northeast intersection of Columbia pike and Glebe road, it is reported. The transaction was handled through the office of Kelley, Steele & Branner and illiam Parramcre. The structure described as an outstanding one, has been designed by E. J. Conner.

The projected center will represent an investment of approximately $250,000, and will be ready for occupancy October 1. According to estimates, density of Arlington traffic has increased almost 100 per cent since last year's count. On this basis, it is estimated 12,000 cars on Columbia pike and 600 on Glebe road will pass the site daily. Kelley, Steele & Branner will be the leasing agents.

New Lavatory Shelf Handy and Popular

Increasingly popular is the shelf lavatory with wide integral ledge for make-up and shaving accessories. A compact mixer fitting delivers water of just the right temperature, and there is a self-draining soap depression on each side. The lavatory itself is of vitreous china, as smooth and as sanitary as a china plate.

Hand Rails Emphasized For Inside Cellar Stairs

All inside cellar stairs should have a hand rail on at least one side. It need not be fancy, but should be sturdy.

Four-by-four or even two-by-four posts as newels securely fastened to the carriage or support of the stairs, with a stout wooden rail well nailed will be inexpensive to install and will save many a dangerous fall.

Smart Paints Will Brighten Up Dull Home

Distribution of light and dark tones on the exterior of a house can made or break it in attractiveness. A certain large cottage, or instance, roomy and pleasant inside, had its exterior appearance greatly impaired by several faults.

First of these were the windows. Window openings of six different sizes gave the house a distracting, spotty, cut-up look. Dark shutters at many of these windows emphasized this lack of unity. A row of dormers jutting from the roof, with sides and faces in a light color, pulled the eye upward and made the house seem too high for its breadth.

A one-story wing at one end of the house caused the structure to appear out of balance and the ill-proportioned chimney at the other end was unduly emphasized by the dark color of the brick.

To remedy these shortcomings, new paint styling was tried. This technique makes the most of things with color in a modern manner.

Applying the principles to this large cottage, stylists first worked to solve the odd-sized window difficulty. Eliminating shutters at all windows not uniform in size contributed greatly to the appearance of the place. Painting the trim and sash in the same color as the body of the house made them blend with the house itself.

Painting the faces and sides of the dormers in a dark color that blended with the roof made them less objectionable. To make the house seem lower the shutters at the upper windows were painted in a deep tone, but downstairs shutters were in the same color as the body of the house.

Anniversary Exhibit Home Is Presented

Miller Project Located In Beautiful Setting In Spring Valley

Celebrating its twenty-eighth year as a builder of fine homes, W. C. & A. N. Miller Development Co. is presenting an outstanding exhibit house known as the "twenty-eighth Anniversary Home," at 5058 Sedgwick street, in Spring Valley.

Located on a slight elevation, adjacent to the intersection of two beautiful curvilinear streets—Tilden and Sedgwick, the house is placed in a group of trees, forming an effective setting for its white painted brick.

Williamsburg Colonial is the inspiration for the architecture of this residence and a feeling of an earlier day is emphasized by the Williamsburg blue of the window blinds and full length door shutters. Two massive chimneys flank the main portion of the house and further interest is achieved by the wing which houses the library and two-car garage.

Decorated House

J. Harold Gooding, interior decorator, has furnished and decorated the house, choosing furnishings and draperies in the spirit of the architecture and achieving an effect that is reminiscent of the eighteenth century.

The entire first floor has unusual charm and is particularly adapted to entertaining. From the library and dining room there are doors leading to the screened porch and a door from the porch gives access to the garden.

Blue and gray in the Williamsburg tones combine with Colonial red to form the color scheme of the first floor. The walls of the living room are papered in an authentic Williamsburg blue and the same color predominates in Colonial type papers used in hall and dining room. The library has a deep warm tone of Colonial red with a small gray eighteenth century medallion. There are a generous number of open bookshelves in the library, with closed shelves below for papers and magazines.

At the back of the main hall there are doors to the family coat closet (a guest closet is adjacent to the front door), the first floor lavatory, pantry, kitchen and basement, providing the convenience of accessibility in a most unobtrusive manner. Kitchen and pantry both have monel metal sinks and a color scheme of gray, red and white has been used.

Four Bedrooms

On the second floor are four large bedrooms, two baths and a vast amount of wardrobe space. Open stairs lead to the third story which has been floored and finished. In the bright sunny basement there are a fireplace in the space designed for a recreation room, a maid's room and bath and ample laundry room.

For 28 years, the company has been building homes of fine quality and thorough workmanship. Besides its attractive homes, there is the advantage of their locality, one of the country's best residential communities. Wesley Heights and Spring Valley have won national prominence and this recognition has come about through the careful control which has been exercised over them at all times.

Homes there are designed separately to fit particular sites for which they are planned and contours of ground and natural beauty of the land are carefully preserved. Long curvilinear streets add great beauty and provide safety for playing children. The anniversary home is a fitting example of Miller-built quality.

Many Cities Are Providing Parking Space

By Herbert U. Nelson
Executive President, National Association of Real Estate Boards.

New types of public action to provide for automobile parking are described by the American Automobile Association from a survey it has just completed in a group of representative cities. In 34 of the cities studied there are municipal parking lots ranging in size from 50,000 to 3,500-car capacity. Some of these lots have been purchased, others leased.

In two cities the lots were acquired through tax delinquencies.

Five cities and two counties have passed ordinances requiring that in case of new homes and multiple dwellings, parking facilities adequate for their occupants shall be provided. Among the larger cities Los Angeles leads off with an ordinance which provides that "in connection with each and every duplex, double dwelling, multiple dwelling, apartment house, bungalow court or multiple-family use of lot, there shall be provided on such lot, garage space in a building for at least one automobile for each family unit or apartment contained on such lot."

The survey found indication that the average person will walk from one to four blocks from a free parking space to his destination if his business takes an hour or less; that he will walk from three to ten blocks if his car is to be parked a half or a full day.

Theaters are required to provide off-street parking space in Evanston, Ill. There must be one parking space for every ten theater seats. The regulation was made in drastically revising the zoning ordinance. Typical of what cities everywhere are thinking about doing, and of what many are doing, the ordinance reduces by 20 per cent the amount of land zoned for commercial purposes and cuts by 50 per cent the area zoned for multiple dwellings or apartment houses.

At the same time it enlarges the area required for a single-family residence. The minimum is made 7,2000 square feet in the A zone and 5,000 feet in the B zone. Evanston joins the group of cities requiring apartment building and row houses to provide their own parking spaces—one for every two dwellin gunits.

Staggering business hours in the central business areas as a means of reducing automobile congestion is a suggestion that has come to my desk from Charles M. Bryant, of Memphis, who points out that many lines of business could operate readily enough with earlier hours. This is especially true of certain public functions. Mr. Bryant suggests that municipal facilities should not be extended beyond the city limits until a certain density of population has been reached in the new area. A survey by traffic engineers recently made indicates that on the streets of the big cities the maximum movement of people in vehicles of all kinds now approaches 15,000 per hour.

Measures for meeting the parking problem, rezoning measures, and density standards for urbanization are in any case related. For that matter, the whole transportation question of our cities, urban congestion, the flight now going on to the suburbs, the new traffic provisions that this in its turn makes necessary, and the resulting new congestion, decline of near-in areas, resulting loss of business in the central district, all are part of one large problem.

It is a problem of city replanning to meet the radical changes that have come about in the last generation in our ways of transportation, our industrial method, our social outlook, our recreations and our whole way of life. That is a large problem, a pressing one, and a pressing one, and a problem of a kind that cities have never had before.

To drive at the solution of these related problems we need to comprehend that they are related. Unless we do, action by local government agencies and by the Federal agencies so directly affecting urban development is bound to be an attempt to go forward in all directions at once. It will be piecemeal, contradictory, wasteful of effort and inadequate.

Renovating Home Urged As Blues' Cure

Expert Says Color Scheme Important To Mental Health

In these war-saddened days, it's of tremendous importance for every man Jack of us to work consciously to counteract the effect of disquieting news with every tangible tool at our command—not only for the sake of our own well-being, but for that of our families as well. As one of the most effective tools, I give you color, cheering, encouraging color—as an antidote for apprehension.

Psychologists champion the use of harmonious color in our surroundings to stimulate our sense of well-being. So strongly do they regard color's effect on physical health that they even advocate pleasant color harmony for the walls of dining rooms as an aid to digestion.

Certainly in these days of jitter-spreading, it's important to use all the tricks in the color psychologist's bag to induce repose, the quieting of nerves and to lend encouragement.

Consequently, it's more than advisable to give your home a color tonic now—to repaint dull walls and to protect worn outdoor surfaces with new coatings that safeguard them against their ever-present enemy—the weather.

There is still another angle to such undertakings. The very planning and carrying out of such projects has a beneficial effect on taut, ragged nerves.

As for the economic advisability of home rehabilitation at this time, a telegraphic survey just conducted by the merchandising magazine, Retailing, serves as a guidepost. Says Retailing: "In many instances, department stores reported that home furnishings were, in fact, doing better than other divisions in the store.

Coal Stokers Improved

Longer life for stoker coal conveyors is achieved by the development of a new process which replaces the old casting method. The new type conveyors are made by twisting a cold bar of steel around a steel core, and fusing the two into a solid piece, engineers report.

Awkward Chimney Can Be Eliminated

A chimney that sticks out into the room is awkward and makes the room hard to furnish. In a narrow room mit cuts the room in half and makes virtually two rooms out of it.

A fireplace that is flush with the wall or has only 8 or 10 inches of projection makes a nicer room and one much easier to furnish.

If there is this slight projection, book shelves can be build against the wall on each side so that the front of the shelves is flush with the chimney breast, and neither the chimney nor the book shelves will seem to project into the room at all.

New Finland Being Built On War Ruins

First Reconstruction Plan Is Developing A Novel Architecture

New York.—First reconstruction plan to come from war-torn Europe is revealed in the Architectural Forum Magazine by Alvar Aalto, chief architect for Finland's reconstruction, who presents a five-point program for development of a new architecture in rebuilding Finnish cities.

"There are about 500,000 people without homes today," Aalto states, in part. "Some are refugees from the areas ceded to Russia under the terms of the peace treaty, others are people made homeless by air raids. Our immediate need is to have homes ready as soon as possible.

"Here we face the same problem as in any process of colonization. Under such circumstances people have first built barracks, or some other quickly constructed form of communal shelter; later these barracks have been replaced by new buildings.

"Even this 'second town' has not often had all the qualifications for permanent use, and so a third town' was built. How uneconomical this system of replacement is must be clear to everyone.

"On the other hand, we have examples where a state has tried to build a completely finished town at once. Cities begun in connection with the first Russian five-year plan furnish illustrations of this, and we know that after the plan fell through thye went back to the barrack system and that they are using them on a large scale today.

Build by Stages

"To avoid such mistakes, the communities Finland will need should be built in the following manner:

"1. The cities must be planned and the houses built so that the living standard of the people may be raised step by step.

"2. Because there is such a great need for homes, they would be built and equipped in stages: First the roof and walls, then in the next step, heating and lighting and later plumbing and other equipment. This would ensure the people immediate shelter, and, by the third step, a completely equipped house. Later stages would include better finishing materials and in the end there would be a complete modern home as a unit in the modern community.

"3. At first many conveniences such as water, baths, etc., will be collective, and later there will be private facilities.

"4. In the beginning the inhabitants would pay a low rent, and with each succeeding step the rent would be raised. This would also conform with the changes in the living standards which have been temporarily lowered by the war, and this level would rise in proportion to the speed of construction.

"5. To realize this idea we must elaborate on this program, and develop a technical system for comprehensive city planning and the construction of houses. The system will necessarily be coordinated with the availability of building materials. Building step by step is the only solution from the point of view of obtaining materials.

Sets Precedent

"Because Finnish reconstruction activity is to start immediately this system cannot be made country-wide at once," Aalto points out in the magazine. "Therefore it is necessary to set up a special organization which will take charge of a number of cities using this method of building in stages.

"The result would be not only to ensure the economic stability of the houses built in this manner, but would set a precedent for the years of reconstruction yet to come and it could probably be used as a basis for housing research in other countries.

"Due to its long tradition of decentralization, Finland can approach contemporary planning problems with far less difficulty and far less dislocation of the population than the older countries," Aalto explains. "The dispersion of the population has tended to emphasize the importance of the house as a source of architectural development.

"Here we have a factor whose favorable influence on the development of architecture cannot be stressed too much. A native tradition of frame construction, special ways of living, peculiar climatic conditions—these form a sound beginning for a new architecture.

"As in most countries, Finnish architecture has not been spared from the devasting effects of world-wide economic crisis. Also, an industry has yet to be developed for the production of standard types of building units which is sufficiently flexible to provide all the products necessary to meet individual requirements and local circumstances.

Future Possibilities

"Consequently a large part of the new architecture in Finland has not yet reached a state of complete harmony with nature, but a good basis for a growing architecture does exist, and it suggests encouraging possibilities for the future.

"A large number of public buildings were destroyed, such as the Technical University. Schools, hospitals, etc., have to be built to replace the building demolished, and new factories, bridges, roads, etc., have to be erected. Some parts of the country need completely new cultural centers.

"To carry out all of this new construction the entire economic power of the country will be required, and a special organization will have to be set up to make planning as effective as possible.

"Concentrated work, carried on under pressure, will show results more quickly and clearly than a process of grdaual development; unfortunately there is one thing which is the antithesis of good quality, and that is the necessity of doing things too quickly."

5 New Detached Brick Homes Shown in Potomac Heights

Dwellings, Built by H. E. Davis, Are Styled In Colonial Manner; Suburban Comfort And Abundant Lot Space Offered

Frank S. Phillips, realtor, announces sale of two of a group of seven new detached brick homes in Potomac Heights, D. C., built by H. E. Davis. Situated just south of Wesley Heights on the slopes of Potomac Valley, they offer quiet, suburban comfort, yet are convient to midtown by transportation facilities.

Styled in the Colonial manner, they present a pleasing variety of architecture, on large lots ideal for landscaping and affording abundant play space for children. All have large living rooms with fireplaces, three bedrooms and two baths, completely equipped kitchens, brick garages. Some have large attics suitable for third floor bedrooms.

Built of quality materials throughout, they include all-brick construction, slate roofs, copper pipes, gutters and downspouts, rock wool insulation, seasoned Douglas fir timber. Keystone kitchen cabinets, Westinghouse refrigeration, Bryant air-conditioned heating plants.

The exhibit home at 2118 Forty-ninth street northwest, is completely furnished by Hilda N. Miller. Price range from $10,650 to $11,450. To reach, drive out Conduit road to W street and right one block.

Experts Say Interior Colors Affect Householders Healths

Interior colors in a home influence not only the effectiveness of a house but even the comfort and well-being of the family.

Experts point out that certain colors will make a room lighter while others make it darker. A 100-watt bulb might be bright enough to read by in a room with white or cream walls, while the same bulb in a room with red or blue walls wouldn't give enough light to prevent eyestrain.

An idea of the relation of color to light may be gained from these facts: Paper-white reflects as much as 80 per cent of the light in a room, but tinted with ivory it drops to 78 per cent. Add a little tan and its reflecting value is lowered to 64 per cent in the scale. Bright sage green is placed at 48 per cent, sky blue at 35 per cent, and dark blue-gray, at only 17 per cent.

It is obviously important to select a light, cheerful tint with good reflection value for a room that is without a large amount of natural light. On the other hand, if a room has so many doors and windows that there is usually a brilliant glare, a restful tone should be chosen

Bridal Presents Blessed to Give As to Receive

Choice of Gift Should Depend On Recipient

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Let's brush a few cobwebs off our ideas about wedding presents. In the first place, all of us love them, for all the remarks we make . . . on both the giving and the receiving end. On the bride's side, well, who wouldn't get the thrill of a lifetime from an avalanche of beautiful things bringing with them the good wishes of those who are fond of her. Those old chestnuts about white elephants are getting very stale; for every gift a bride doesn't dote on she gets dozens that she adores. On the side of the giver—come, come, don't we all welcome the excuse to trot out and buy something lovely for a wedding present . . . even to stretch a point on the price.

The Measure of Pleasure

Since it is fun both to give and get wedding presents, we might as well drain the full measure of pleasure out of shopping for it, wrapping it grandly. But what to select depends on the bride.

If she has everything, make your gift some rare and fastidious treasure—a piece of Staffordshire or an antique carved ivory figurine from China, a silver tea caddy or a single frail and beautiful coffee cup. Don't try to compete in grandeur with other things she may have or received, but rather look for some small elegancy.

If she has very little but loves beauty, don't go practical on her hands. For her should be the gift of some lovely something that she wouldn't be able to have otherwise. Real lace place doilies, for instance, with linen napkins to match. Or a set of Spode or Wedgwood dessert plates, or Lenox service plates. Or a sterling silver sugar and creamer. Or a Sheffield tray. Or a handsome crystal flower urn. Or a needlepoint chair seat. Or a hand-quilted throw of pure silk, flowered on one side, plain on the other.

Heart's Delight

If she's a domestic wren, then she's a good one to take your practicalities out on. A glass coffee maker would be her heart's delight (anybody's for that matter). Or a two-at-a-time waffle griddle. Or an electric biscuit maker to go on the table. Or an iron with all the trimmings, such as heat control, automatic cut off, safety rest, etc. Or a bright pottery tureen with individual bowls to match—for informal suppers of onion soup, chili con carne, spaghetti or a right royal stew.

The Week In Business

De Soto Gains

Detroit—An all-time high record for retail sales was established by De Soto in the week ending June 1, according to an announcement by C. E. Bleicher, vice president and general manager of the company. Sales topped all previous weekly records by a comfortable margin and showed a 35 per cent increase over the previous week, Mr. Bleicher announced. In addition, dealers reported the biggest week of used-car sales in the history of the company.

"When it is considered that the new record was established in a week when there was a national holiday, the performance is all the more impressive," Mr. Bleicher said. Individual instances cited from some of the larger points where dealers have shown more deliveries in May than in any mohth since they have been in business, show Washington, D. C., as such a center.

Pontias, Mich.—Retail deliveries of Pontiac cars bounded upward during the last ten-day period of May, exceeding the estimates of company executives and resulting in a total for the month of 22,516, which was a gain of 42.6 per cent over May of 1939, according to announcement by D. U. Bathrick, general sales manager at the celebration attending the production of the 2,000,000th Pontiac car.

The third ten-day figures were 8,008, gain of 35.6 per cent over the second ten-day deliveries of May this year and 37 per cent over the third ten-day period of May last year. The final ten-day deliveries also exceeded the last ten days of April this year. Unfilled retail orders continued to hold their four to one ration over unfilled orders on the same date a year ago.

Sales of used cars by dealers all over the United States set a new high for any month in the company's history with a total of 44,569 units. Used cars for May a year ago were 33,104. Used car sales during the final ten-day period of May this year were 15,764, a figure that was exceeded only by the first ten-day sales of May, and that is 36.2 per cent ahead of the last ten-day period of May, 1939. Inventories of used cars in dealers' stocks declined for the second straight period, while turnover for the month was at the rate of 28.7 days.

Oldsmobile Sales Gain

Sales of this year's Oldsmobiles are continuing at a record-breaking pace with a total of 8,465 cars delivered during the last ten days of May. This is an increase of 74 per cent over the 4,855 units sold in the same period last year and is a gain of more than 43 per cent over the sales made during the previous ten-day period of May, according to D. E. Ralston, general sales manager. For May, sales were 60 per cent ahead of last year, with a total for the month of 20,930 compared to 13,107 in May, 1939. This represents the largest monthly sales volume since June, 1937. Sales for the first five months of 1940 total 86,107, which is 42 per cent greater than the 60,803 cars sold in the same period last year.

Modernizing Magic Saves A Bathroom

Family Makes It Attractive Despite Its Age

By Phyrne Squier

Modernizing magic—with the very practical assistance of carpentry and color—can work minor miracles in every room of an aging house. And in no room can the effects of such renovating be more resultful than in the bathroom.

To take a specific instance, there's the case of the bathroom that was not as young as it used to be. A darkly stained wainscot of vertical boarding extended around the base of the four walls. Upper walls and ceiling were an unpleasant shade of tan and the well-worn linoleum on the floor echoed the same tone. Outstanding eyesore in the room was an outmoded old tub, elevated to undue height by four bulbous feet. The tub was further disfigured by the makeshift shower which reared its ungraceful head above the tub and helped to support an oval track from which a shower curtain hung. The tub was flanked by an ill-proportioned wicker hamper at one end and "necessary plumbing" at the other.

Beneath an old-style medicine cabinet was an old-style wash basin—both inadequately lighted by a fixture suspended from the ceiling on a chain. This was so placed that you stood in your own light when you faced the mirror. In the wall opposite the tub were two windows and between them stood an old-fashioned radiator. The doorway to the hall broke into the fourth wall.

Family Lacked Funds

Inasmuch as the family which belonged with the bathroom was hampered by insufficient funds, it was necessary at the offset to give up any idea of replacing the plumbing fixtures or the linoleum. The men of the family were handy with tools and the women were interested in the paint and color angle, so they combined forces and went to work.

First of all, they undertook a minor structural alteration which made a drastic in the room's appearance. A floor-to-ceiling partition with three arches cut in it was placed about three feet from the bathtub wall. The largest arch framed the tub. At each end of the tube—at right angles to the partiing an alcove around the tub. The addition of a step—running the length of the tub alcove—concealed the legs of the tub and gave it more modern proportions. The further addition of a vertical board, extending from the step up to a point beneath the curving edge of the tub—furthered the modern appearance.

In the second arch—where the wicker hamper had formerly stood—a cupboard was built for the storage of towels. In the bottom of this cupboard, a hamper was constructed. The third arch made the "necessary plumbing" less conspicuous.

Conceals Radiator

The tool-wielding committee, thoroughly enthused by this time, then proceeded to enclose the base ofthe old-fashioned washstand and to build a dressing table into the center of the window wall. This concealed the awkward radiator, but did not interefere with the radiation of heat.

The paint and color committee in makingtheir plans had satisfied the principles of paint styling—the new art of making the most of things with color. They also had followed the most recent report of the Council for Paint Styling. This report, based on a national survey of new homes and decorators' display rooms, showed them the types of color treatments most favored by the public these days.

From the report, they learned that the color treatment for bathrooms foremos in favor currently is: have all walls and the ceiling in the same color. As for the trim—it should be lighter than—or the same as—the falls, but different in color.

Applying these findings to their own bathroom, they enameled the ceiling and all four walls (including the wainscot) in a soft, light-reflecting periwinkle blue. Window frames and sashes, also the door and door frame, were coated in a soft rose color of the same depth as the wall. A deeper shade of this same rose tone was used on the ceiling and the three walls of the bathtub niche. Matching the color in a fabric, the women made draperies of it for the windows. A blending tone—close to a burgundy—was used for coating the floor. It turned the hardworn floor covering into one that gleamed pleasantly beneath its wax coating.

The enclosing boards beneath the wash stand and tub were coated white to aid in fostering the illusion of new fixtures. The built-in cupboard and hamper were painted the same periwinkle blue as the wall. Door pulls were done in the burgundy tone. Above the washstand, a new mirror with tubular lights at each side of it supplied a further modern note.

Adding a gray and light-hearted touch to the room's decoration were the musical notes painted on These were done in the burgundy color and were guaranteed to encourage vocalizing in the shower.

Students Build Models Before Designing

Miniature Homes Are Constructed From Ground Up

Scale of models of low-cost houses accurate to the smallest detail of building construction were the architectural feature of the eighty-first annual exhibition of student work at Cooper Union, New York City. Complete to the insulation between the walls and the sheathing beneath the asbestos, the models were built by first-year students of architecture.

"Before a student at Cooper Union does anything else in architecture, he learns the vocabulary of construction," Esmond Shaw, assistant art director, explains. He builds a house from the ground up. Not until he has experienced the problems faced daily by carpenters, plasterers and masons, is he considered ready to start designing houses of his own."

The scale models in the exhibition represent an improvement in the educational value of model houses, Shaw declares. "Instead of being constructed of cardboard and glue and in the usual manner of classroom design, they are built of wood, stone and cement. The floor joints, for instance, are notched and nailed to the sill and the sill is anchored to the top of the concrete footing."

Outstanding among the models was one planned and constructed by George Pickow, of 1510 Carroll street, Brooklyn, and John T. Ross, of 1406 Merriam avenue, Bronx. Their house was shown with the roof cut away and a side and front wall left open, allowing visitors to see each step taken in building a small house. The sill plate was 3 inches by 6 inches on a concrete footing. Studs 2 inches by 4 inches were used throughout, doubled around large openings.

Box Lock Demands Peculiar Fitting

Those big polished brass box locks with the huge key that our old houses had on their front doors, and the smaller brass or iron ones that were on the inside doors, were decorative and effective.

In those days the face of the trim around the doors was flush with the surface of the door, so that the little box that caught the latch when the door was closed was screwed to the face of the trim.

Nowadays the trim is usually set forward so that if these big box locks, or rim locks, as they are called, are to be used, either the old method of flush trim should be adopted or a recessed plate used that will hold the latch and give the appearance of the little box on the trim.

Dry Cleaner Best In Treating Floor

When removing was from a varnished floor before revarnishing, it is not wise to use explosive materials such as benzine or gasoline. There are dry powder cleaners, sold by large paint stores, which may be mixed four tablespoons of powder to one gallon of hot water.

This solution is applied hot to the floor with a mop or brush, allowed to stand for a few minutes, then rinsed with clean water and wiped dry. To make sure that the wax is wholly removed, apply the varnish to one board and allow it to remain over night. If the varnish is tacky (or sticky) next morning, the wax is not thoroughly removed. Then the floor must be recleaned.

Steels Favored As Stocks Rise 1 to 3 Points

Short Covering Halves Gains Before Close; Turnover Brisk

By the Associated Press

New York, June 15.—The stock market again shook off war worries and concentrated on home business prospects today with the result leading issues stepped out of a generally bullish week well on the advancing side.

Steels, along with other assorted war stocks, were principally favored and, at the best gains ranged from 1 to mor e than 3 points. Top marks were halved in many cases at the close, as traders lightened commitments pending possibly unsettling news from abroad over the week-end.

Highest price levels were attained in the first hour when activity was most pronounced. The pace slowed as profits were cashed.

Net Gain for Week

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was up .4 of a point at 40.9 and, on the week, registered a net gain of 2.7 points, best showing for any week since early last September. Transfers of 559,170 sharesb compared with 199,270 last Saturday. The six-day turnover of around 5,000,000 shares just about doubled that of the previous week.

Heartening buyers of shares were forecasts of another runup in next week's mill operations, a brisk expansion in last week's department store sales, widening distribution of new automobiles in the early part of June and heavier demand for copper.

Aircrafts Weaker

It was not a one-way market today, despite the predominance of plus signs. Aircrafts backed away, apparently on the thought of French cancellation of lane orders, although it was believed the United States would take everything that could be turned out in the aviation field.

Stocks finishing ahead included U. S. Steel, Bethelehem, Crucible, Chrysler, American Telephone, Dow Chemical, Westinghouse, Union Carbide, Eastman Kodak, Loft, American Car & Foundry, Santa Fe, Anaconda, Kennecott, Sears Roebuck and Consolidated Edison.

On the offside as much as a point or so were Douglas Aircraft, United Aircraft, Lockheed, Sperry, Glenn Martin, Allied Chemical, Texas Corp. and U. S. Gypsum.

Among curb gainers of fractions to a point were aluminum of America, American Gas, Gulf Oil, Electric Bond & Share and Bell Aircraft.

Hopkins Sees U. S. Income At 1929 Level

Last Year's Figure Put at 70 Billions, 9% Over 1938

Secretary of Commerce Hopkins estimated yesterday that last year's national income, after vguring differences in price levels, was equal to or higher than 1929.

He said 1039 national income "produced" was about $70,000,000,000, an increase of 9 per cent over 1939 and 75 per cent over the depression low in 1932.

While the vgure was far below the estimate of $82,900,000,000 in 1929, Hopkins pointed out that prices and living costs were lower in 1939. Thus, he explained, the Nation probably was able to buy as much with its 1939 income as its 1929 income.

Yesterday's income estimate was based in production of American industry, agriculture and other activities, and was about $750,000,000 larger than former estimates of the amount of income paid out to individuals during the year in the form of salaries, dividends and other payments. The difference represented the amount of money business saved during the year. In 1938, income paid out was larger than income produced, indicating business deficit.

Auto Concern Gives Proof Of Readiness

Far Ahead of Schedule, War Department Gets 7,000 Trucks

By David J. Wilkie,
Associated Press Automotive Editor

Detroit, June 15.—A few weeks ago one of the larger automobile companies reecived an order—for "educational" purposes—from the United States War Department for 7,000 trucks. The trucks were different from the average commercial vehicles; there were certain specifications not at all routine in the assembly plant, but—

The trucks were delivered to the Government four mouths hadea of schedule.

Numerous other ahead-of-schedule deliveries on War Department orders have been reported from various plants of the automobile industry awarded "educational" orders, but this one has been singled out among authoritative observers as proof that the men who make motor cars know what they are talking about when they say they haven't even scratched the surface of the industry's production potentialities.

Just Tell Them What

"Let's have a blueprint of it and we'll swing it into mass production," has been a common comment of automotive engineers when asked what the industry's production division could do with this or that particular item of war armament.

"Mechanized warfare is right down our alley," said another outstanding engineer in commenting on the car industry's place in any defensive armament program.

Facilities? The motor industry has them in abundance because keeping plants up to date has be npart of the philosophy of the men who head the business of making a different type of automobile each year. "And if we haven't got enough," said one of these executives this week, "we can put tents up out there in those fields—(pointing from his office window)—and transfer a lot of work to such emergency 'floor space.'

"Floor space is the least of the problems; tooling is a little more complex, but not nearly as much so as a lot of persons believe. Some of the tools currently in use require but little change to get into an enormous production of shell casings."

Output Still Heavy

And while the industry's production chiefs are giving constant thought to the capacity of their equipment for armament production they go on turning out automobiles at a rate considerably higher than is seasoal at this period.

Several months ago, before war developments precipitated the American Government's defensive armametn program, it was suggested by several leading trade authorities that a surplus of new cars was being built up against the possibility of a huge volume of war orders descending upon the motor industry later in the year. This surmise apparently has been borne out because there is no indication at present that the stock of 500,000 or more new vehicles in dealers' hands, in storage or in transit will influence the manufacturers to ease up on car assemblies within the next three or four weeks.

Along with the speculation concerning 1941 model output, due to get under way in mid-August under normal conditions, is some discussionof what may develop in car price schedules if munitions manufacture should slow down initial production of new cars for civilian transport.

Arms Program Dominates Business Scene in Week

Change in Business Psychology Noted; Wall Street and Industrial Community Turn Thoughts to Home Front

New York, June 15.—Under cover of the exciting events in Europe, a change occurred this week in business and speculative psychology which may mark a turning point in the American chapter of the economic history of the world struggle.

While political decisions of the gravest importance for the American people still hung in the balance, there was growing evidence that Wall street and the industrial community had turned their primary thoughts and energy to the home front, where a $5,000,000,000 arms program dominated the scene.

In security markets, where every reverse of the Allied cause for months had been the signal for nervous selling, the fall of Paris and the officially admitted desperate plight of the French defense was met with calm price strength in all sections of the lost.

Speed Underrated

Among businessmen was increasing preoccupation with the problems of the defense program and frank admission in some quarters that industry had underrated the speed with which Washington was prepared to move in creating the sinews of war.

Industrial activity, led again by steel and the heavy industries, continued to climb, and the retail field began to show signs of starting to catch up with industry's climb, as higher pay rolls, greater employment and an increased dividend flow found its way to merchants' hands.

Another token that the war had lost some of its power to shock the American consumer was the continued rise in home building, which in May reached the greatest monthly total since the summer of 1929, according to F. W. Dodge Corporation, building statisticians.

Rush for Materials

Factory wheels were turning at a rate equal to that of mid-February, which was a relatively active period. Some observers thought that with the momentum afforded by the huge arms spending here for American and Allied account it would soon reach the near-doom level of late fall after the start of hostilities.

The Associated Press average for the latest week stood at 102.1, while the peak in mid-December was 112.1.

A factor in growing steel orders, as well as in many other raw and semifinished material lines, was the fear many manufacturers shared that priority granted to Government arms orders might make it difficult to get deliveries for less essential products. As one steel authority said: "Everybody is in a hurry to get his name on the books."

The swiftness of Washington's moves into a position as No. 1 customer convinced many business observers that the President's advisory group, headed by Edward R. Stettinius, jr., and Edward S. Knudsen, had been given a free hand and orders to "shoot the works."

Some of the quick-paced buying included: Placement of a $327,000,000 order, largest in history, for 22 naval vessels within a few hours of the approval of the apropriation; opening of bids for big quantities of blankets and uniform material; word that the Navy Department was prepared to order shortly the entire 3,000 aircraft provided in 1941 fiscal year appropriation.

At the same time came word from London that that government was prepared to go "all out" in its supply purchasing here and had freed funds earmarked for purchases originally scheduled months, or even years, from now.

The Allied purchasing mission revealed it had received delivery on approximately 3,000 of the 8,000 planes it has ordered here since last fall, and said it was prepared to spend "many millions" more immediately for additional aircraft and supplies.

Buyers here for the French group this week ordered 10,000 motor trucks, valued at between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000. The British were said to be inquiring for a similar number.

Italian Bonds Surge Forward On War Reports

New York, June 15 (AP).—Placed by Italian loans, which bounded up 2 to 10 points, all divisions of the bonod market ended higher today.

Brokers said buying of Italian obligations apparently was based on military successes claimed for the Rome-Berlin Axis. Most of them had been hammered down to record lows immediately preceding Italian entrance into the war, a fact which aided the rise once owners altered their viewpoint on the outlook and withdrew further offerings.

Italian government 7s finished up 5¼ at 45¼; Credit Consortium 8s added 20 at 35, and Rome 6½s were up 7⅛ at 38. Others higher in the foreign group included Argentine 4s, Canada 4s, Japan 5½ and German 7s and 5½s.

Corporate bonds followed stocks into higher ground.

U. S. Governments were less active than on Friday, but gains up a full point or better were in evidence for the majority traded.

Preferred Dividend Voted

Directors of the Real Estate Mortgage & Guaranty Corporation have declared a semi-annual dividend of 25 cents a share on the preferred stock, payable June 29 to holders of record June 19.

Economist's View

Nazis Acquire Liabilities As Well as New Assets

By Merryle Rukeyser
A Special Correspondent.

A SAGE VETERAN of many industrial battles remarked the other day that politicians over here were using national defense as an anesthetic to operate on us and take away some of our liberties and still more of our substance.

His point was that the new war spirit was being employed as a smokescreen to deflect attention from the shortcomings in domestic affairs of men charged with administering our national affairs.

He saw in the present trend a pretext for a new grab for power.

Thus, war, even when physically remote, constitutes the greatest extravagance of the human race.

In wasting men and assets, nations deprive themselves of the opportunity which science and invention provide for better living for all the people.

This applies not only to the vanquished, but also to the victors.

Of course, the showman Adolf Hitler, with a controlled press and the power to liquidate his critics, doubtless makes the Germans feel that they are supermen who are exempt from these inexorable economic laws.

THE TEUTON LEADER, with no regard for the feelings and the liberties of other peoples and sects, has been introducing the concept of financing the German national life through capital gains rather than through running his economy on a self-supporting basis.

By the technique of war and the threat of war, he has been bringing into the Reich various additional nations, with their natural resources and accumulation of material and assets.

But at best this is an abnormal and temporary form of fiscal science.

It is not unlike supporting the family budget in 1929 solely on stock market profits, and then finding in 1930 and beyond that such profits have been replaced by losses.

It is necessary to look at both sides of the balance sheet, and to recognize that, as he takes over unwilling territories, Hitler acquires for his nation liabilities as well as assets. He acquires mouths to feed and bodies to clothe.

Even if his living standard of the subject peoples is to be drastically and ruthlessly reduced, you can seize their surplus wealth only once. It is not a recurring item like each year's income out of current production.

THUS, IF Adolf Hitler survives this war, win, lose or draw, he will have his hands full administering such inflated or deflated realm as he may have under his direction.

Already the German people have paid heavily for the folly of this second European war of our generation. At the very minimum, they have foregone the advantage of translating into better living standards for the German people the new program of enlarged productivity and reemployment. All the benefits have been channelized off for the war machine. The Germans thus far have muffed the opportunity for better living, and have instead been driven down the valley of revenge, war and national expansion.

A wiser leadership would instead have sought to rehabilitate Germany through peaceful economic progress.

A war machine diverts from the people a very large proportion of the goods and services produced each year, and thus greatly depresses living standards. It is man's greatest invention for impoverishing the human race.

Even though we know this and appreciate it clearly, we in America cannot alone be wise on a unilateral basis. We need of course sufficient armament to defend ourselves against potential attack from the dumbbells and the psychopaths of other nations. But it will be helpful to keep ever before our eyes a recognition of the price we pay for the current world disequilibrium.

Grain Trading Margins Halved

Chicago, June 15 (AP).—The Board of Trade Clearing Corporation margin requirements of members in grain trading today were restored to the basis in effect May 31.

The margins now required will be 5 cents a bushel on wheat, 4 cents on corn, 2 cents on oats and 5 cents on rye and soy beans.

As an emergency measure requirements were doubled recently in some cases due to market conditions resulting from establishment of minimum prices on grains. These minimums were abolished yesterday.

B. & O. Carloadings Up 7,274 in Week

Baltimore, June 12 (AP).—Baltimore & Ohio Railroad carloadings for the week ended June 8 totaled 49,370 loads, an increase of 7,274 over the corresponding week of last year and a gain of 4,255 loads over the total of 45,115 for the previous week ended June 1, 1940.

Cotton Use Rises

The Census Bureau reported yesterday that cotton consumed during May totaled 636,467 bales of lint and 92,052 bales of linters, compared with 623,893 and 90,839 in April this year, and 606,090 and 74,668 in May last year.

Fractional Gains, Erratic Swings Mark Wheat List

Chicago, June 15 (AP).—Wheat prices closed ⅜@¾ cent higher today near the best level of the session after swinging erratically over a range about ½ cents.

An early advance of ½@¾ cent, influenced largely by an turn in securities, was followed by a quick setback, during which prices tumbled 1⅜ to 1½ cents from the highs. In the final half-hour the recorvery was resumed.

Closing prices were 80@79⅞ for July, and 80⅜@80½ for September. Corn finished ⅛@⅛ lower after having been off as much as ⅞@1⅜ cents at one stage. July finished 61⅝, and September, 60⅜. Oats lost ⅛@⅜ cent; rye, ⅜@¾; soy beans, ⅛@4¼ cents and lard closed 5 lower to 2 higher.

While Government officials received offerings on white flour acceptances will not be announced until Monday. If prices are deemed satisfactory some millers expected the Government may buy as much as 2,000,000 barrels, equivalent to around 9,000,000 bushels of grain.

Miss Byrd Entertains At Luncheon

Honor Guests Are Virginia Watkins And Viada Boy-Ed

Berryville, Va., June 15.—Miss Margaret Byrd entertained on Wednesday at a luncheon in honor of Miss Virginia Watkins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Watkins, and Miss Viada Boy-Ed, daughter of Mrs. Karl Boy-Ed, both of whom will make their debuts later in the summer.

• • • •

SENATOR AND MRS. Harry F. Byrd have with them at Rosemont their sons, Beverley and Richard, who have returned from school to spend the summer here. Beverley has been a student at Cornell University and Richard has been attending Culver Military Academy.

• • • •

Mr. and Mrs. William Bell Watkins had as their guests at Annfield Mrs. Struve and Misses Mary Louise and Virginia Struve, of California. Mr. and Mrs. John Corn, of Washington, have also been visiting the Watkins.

• • • •

Much interest was shown in the garden party held at Exedra, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Hartman Kenworthy, near Purcellville. This was a benefit party under the auspices of the Daughters of the British Empire and the proceeds will aid the British War Relief Society. Patronesses were Mrs. Nevile Butler, Countess Gainsborough, Mrs. Curzon-Howe, Mrs. G. C. Pirie, Lady Chalkley, Mrs. Hoyer Millar and Mrs. Anthony Coleby.

• • • •

MRS. GEORGE P. GREENHALGH and Miss Sue Bolling, of Charlottesville, have been in Detroit, this week where the Springsbury horses were being shown. From Detroit, Mrs. Greenhalgh went to Toledo, Ohio., to spend several days with Mr. and Mrs. George Greenhalgh, jr.

Mrs. John B. Neill has returned from Charlottesville, where she attended finals at the University of Virginia, where her nephew, William Suddath, jr., received his degree in the school of law. Mrs. Neill has as her guests W. H. Harris and Miss Helen Harris, of Fort Valley, Ga., who also were at the university during commencement. Mrs. Gray Beverley spent Wednesday in Front Royal, Va., where she was a guest at a luncheon and card party given by Mrs. A. C. Carson at her home near Riverton.

MR. AND MRS. J. M. Clagett had as their guest at Springfield recently Miss Gertrude Brown, of West Palm Beach, Fla., Mrs. Wyndham Stokes Clarke and her two children, Shelby and Carol, who have been visiting the Clagetts have also returned to their home in Fairmont, W. Va.

Mrs. Joseph F. Moore, Miss Anne Stribling and Mrs. Gray Beverley were recent guests of Mrs. Bernard B. Jones at her home in Washington. Mrs. Jones expects to close her home in Washington the latter part of the month and come to Audley to spend the remainder of the season. Others who have opened their summer home in Clarke are Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Wilson, of Washington, Mr. and Mrs. Karl Droop, also of Washington, expect to move to their summer home shortly.

• • • •

MAYOR-ELECT and Mrs. Leonard Bell have had visiting them Dr. and Mrs. Herman Bell and two children. Dr. Bell, who is head of the French department at Hampden Sidney, expects to teach at Radford State Teachers College during the summer session.

Miss Rosalind Huidekoper, who has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Downes in Wilmington, Del., is now the guest of her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Rathborne, at their home on Long Island.

Mrs. Everarde Meade has been the guest of her son, Everarde K. Meade, who is a cadet at West Point. Mrs. Meade also has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. John A. Chew in New York City.

Sound Deadener Made Attractive

It is not always possible to combine science and beauty, but the application of sound-deadening treatment to the walls and ceilings of a room need not make it unattractive. In fact, quite the contrary is true.

One of the popular types of acoustical materials is made from mica which is expanded by the application of heat and has an attractive natural color of iridescent golden ecru.

Painting, however, does not lessen the efficiency. Decorative reps or highly ornamental brocades may be applied over other types of acoustical materials. In most cases acoustical application does not limit decoration at all.

THIS MAY BE YOUR OPPORTUNITY
NEW MERCHANDISING IDEA
SEE MEN GETTING BIG INCOMES
An unusual chance for the right man. You have been looking for something a man of average ability can make money with. We have that. Maybe you have heard gilded promises and spectacular claims, and have begun to be skeptical. We hardly blame you—but ask you to be open-minded and as frank with us as we are with you. Would you put in hours—study—energy—if given the same chance as men earning $40 to $125 per week in commissions? We have men doing this.

Nothing else resembles our electrical product in any manner—yet it's a necessity! The way we sell it is new—productive—different—just limited to a man up, supply every service he needs to build himself a profitable business of his own—WITHOUT INVESTMENT—with benefit of full training, all necessary equipment supplies free. Six places available now.

We don't know if you are the man. But if you're 25 to 55 years of age, married, trustworthy, a worker, we advise you not to try to guess if Opportunity is knocking for You, but go and see. If it is, your connection here will be a permanent one, with income not subject to declines, and a good future with a very strong, money-making enterprise. Investigate now. That much we can tell you over your bath. Call at Suite 305, Dantike Bldg., 1010 Vermont Ave. N.W., Monday at 1:30 p. m. sharp.

If You Earn Money You Can Borrow Money Here
Our credit requirements are most reasonable. Loans here are based on your sense of responsibility and earning capacity. Therefore, you need not hesitate to apply for a loan in any amount from $10 to $300. You pay the loan a little at a time—out of income—and our E-q-u-a-l-i-z-e-d Payment Plan makes it easier for you to budget these sums. No co-signers. No furniture, no automobiles needed in most cases. No wage assignment. No extra fees, fines, or insurance charges. Only charge is interest as set by the "Uniform Small Loan Law." Utmost privacy—no information to employer, friends or relatives. Money in one day—red tape cut. Come in or phone for more information—no obligation, of course. Plenty of free parking.

THE SIXTH COLUMN
• AN EDITORIAL •

© MACE PROPERTIES INC. 1940

We quote from the Washington Star of June 16, 1917: "The greatest rental boom in the history of Washington is well under way! . . . 'Our office' (reports one real estate operator) 'could fill twice as many apartments as we have on our lists but the apartments are not available' . . . The rental business for the next few years, at least, WILL BE HIGHLY PROFITABLE." (The capital letters are ours for emphasis.)

1917—A Landlord's Holiday!

That was in 1917. There were billions of dollars appropriated for defense at that time yet more than 50,000 workers poured into Washington to administrate the huge clerical task that a few millions of dollars required. It was a landlord's holiday! Rents jumped to an abnormal high because of the influx of new workers.

Already the finger is upon the hour! Already apartment houses and homes with "spare rooms" are beginning to feel the demand.

A Rent Raise Is Coming!

THE SIXTH COLUMN—the army of property owners who are quick to seize the opportunity to recoup their losses of the past ten years—IS SWINGING INTO ACTION. Washington rents are bound to rise just as they did in 1917. The law of supply and demand operates frightfully fast during emergency. AND NOWHERE IN THE NATION DOES THE SIXTH COLUMN ACT WITH SUCH PURPOSEFUL SPEED AS IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL WHERE THE HUB OF NATIONAL DEFENSE ACTIVITIES ADDS SPOKES TO ITS GIGANTIC WHEEL OF MOBILIZATION!

Grasp This Opportunity!

To you who are far-sighted; to you who REMEMBER; to you who were here during each successive EMERGENCY INFLUX, this story need not be emphasized. But to the family—the FATHER and MOTHER upon whose shoulders the burden of security for themselves and for their loved ones has been more recently thrust, A GRAND OPPORTUNITY awaits you in beautiful WESTOVER HILLS!

Here in the green, verdant foothills of Virginia; 20 minutes from Central Washington over winding, well paved roads; within less than 5 minutes WALK from Grammar and Junior High Schools, is rising a community never dreamed of before.

Yours for $1 a Day!

Picture, if you will, a well-planned, mechanically complete single unattached two-story five-room brick home reinforced with steel and concrete with oak parquet floors and Timken air-conditioning set within a gateway of elegance FOR A PURCHASE PRICE of ONE DOLLAR PER DAY!

Picture, if you will, a concrete basement with concrete floors and steel ceilings that can be converted into a playroom, game room or even a comfortable living room in a jiffy; a 50x150-foot lot where gardens, ponds and lawns will grow into beauty spots of permanence and remembrance.

Read It Again!

Yes, all of this for ONE DOLLAR PER DAY! (Of course you'll have to read it all over again. We know it's too good to be taken on first reading.) BUT THIS MUCH IS CERTAIN! YOU WILL NEVER, perhaps, HAVE A CHANCE TO BUY A HOME LIKE THESE AT SUCH A LOW PRICE AGAIN! And, truthfully, we have not told you ALL the good things about these 1950 homes.

We have not told you that THEY ARE THOROUGHLY INSULATED; we have not told you that THEY ARE INDIVIDUAL AND ARTISTIC; we have yet to SHOW YOU the concrete curbs, sidewalks and paved streets, AND WE HAVE NOT TOLD YOU THAT THE PAYMENT PLAN INCLUDES TAXES, INSURANCE AND INTEREST!

Accept my PERSONAL invitation to inspect TODAY what I consider our greatest achievement in QUALITY low-cost, low up-keep HOMES. It is our challenge to THE SIXTH COLUMN! Thank you.

Double your driving joy by taking this breezy, cool drive to this "City in the Making" TODAY . . . Simply drive over the Memorial or Key Bridge; follow onto Lee Highway driving out LEE HIGHWAY to NORTH GLEBE ROAD; THENCE to left on NORTH GLEBE ROAD to WASHINGTON BLVD., right DIRECT to Beautiful

Don't believe all you hear about Hollywood. Dame Rumor spreads a lot of stories about film notables and never stops to check her facts. The result is gossip—sometimes funny and some-

GOSSIP— Filmdom's Curse

By Lucie Neville.

Hollywood.

This is the true story of a lot of stories that aren't true—of outlandish myths and fables about movie stars and Hollywood and how claptrap can grow into persistent legend.

Probably you've heard about poor, poor Nelson Eddy's blindness. Or Jeanette MacDonald's tragic loss of voice.

Maybe your section of the country has had wind of the whispers that the real Greta Garbo is dead. Perhaps you have heard from a neighbor—who got it through a friend whose brother once had a date with a Hollywood beauty parlor operator—that one side of Claudette's Colbert's face is horribly disfigured.

And so on—and on. Dozens of stars have been the subject of baseless stories which have spread like the tale of a Martian invasion. In most cases the movie companies are not much concerned, since such reports fan the public's curiosity and interest. The studios also remain silent when an actor is being harmed by a rumor, because an official denial serves only to arouse skepticism and spread the story farther.

But such yarns can drive a player to the threshold of the booby-hatch. Nelson Eddy, recently returned from a concert tour, is almost as much upset by the continuing talk about his eyes as he is pleased with the attendance records which paid such high tribute to his voice.

Eddy has grown so touchy that even a joking question by an interviewer may make him snap: "Bring an optometrist to look at me! Bring me some fine print, and I'll read it as far away as you can! Look at this script I'm studying—it isn't printed in Braille, is it?"

When he has simmered down, the warbling actor may be persuaded to discuss more amicably the story of his persecution.

"I don't know how the rumor got started in the first place, though I suppose it came from my wearing dark glasses sometimes in the sun."

A better guess, Hollywood agrees, would be that it began with a few unflattering closeups of Eddy in some of his early pictures. His eyes are light blue, and when improperly lighted, the screen photograph with a sort of milky opacity.

Most fables about Hollywood people have more definitely traceable origins—sometimes from single incidents. Because of a couple of curiously embarrassing experiences, Eddy's usual co-star, Jeanette MacDonald, no longer allows strangers on sets when her musical sequences are being filmed.

A couple of years ago a magazine correspondent, flushed with a scandal-excavating triumph in the East, came here to dish some real lowdown on the movie colony. Totally ignorant of technical methods, he began a studio tour and hadn't been on the Eddy-MacDonald set five minutes before he smelled out a brand new and sensational story.

His story was simply this: That Jeanette MacDonald actually couldn't sing; that she only went through the motions while somebody else did her warbling for the screen.

What had happened was that the conclusion-jumper had seen the star silently mouthing the words of a song while the actual singing came through a loudspeaker from a playback machine. This looked like proof that somebody else's voice was being dubbed in with Miss MacDonald's acting. What he didn't know was that every singer prerecords every song under ideal acoustical and pick-up conditions on specially designed recording stages. Later, on the actual set, the record is played while the singer goes through the lip motions and gestures for the camera.

The comedy, "Ninotchka," proved that Greta Garbo still is very much alive at the box-office, but an amazing and persistent myth insists that she died several years ago and that a double took her place on the screen.

The report got its impetus from a Hollywood boulevard traffic accident in which a woman was killed. A news broadcaster, on his way to the radio studio, paused to push into the crowd and stare at the victim. "Looks like Greta Garbo!" said someone; and sure enough, she did. A police [illegible] and said he guessed it really was Miss Garbo, all right. The radio commentator sprinted to his station and put the electrifying flash on the air. After awhile, some saner mind recalled that Miss Garbo was in Sweden at the time, and presumably feeling quite well, so a retraction was issued.

But the idea already had been planted. It was remembered that the actress often had been reported in two distant cities on the same day, so she must have a double. And maybe it was the double who had gone to Sweden.

In addition, there was the already thriving fantasy about Miss Garbo's having succumbed to an illness in 1932. It was suggested that her studio, rather than accept the outright loss of a prestige star potentially worth millions, might have hired a substitute whom it kept in seclusion from press and public.

The truth is that Metro at first opposed Miss Garbo's assumption of aloofness. It was her shrewd agent, Harry Eddington, who engineered the change from a lanky and amiable but unprepossessing youngster to a mystery-shrouded, fanatically shy glamorist.

Among other unpleasant untruths is the yarn involving Claudette Colbert. It stems from the fact that she insists upon being photographed, especially in closeups, only from the left side. Costly sets have been rebuilt to accommodate this sensitiveness because there is a faint lack of symmetry between the right and left sides of her face.

Since Miss Colbert is reluctant to talk about it, and because observing fans have noticed this one-way profile without knowing the reason, wild explanations have sprung up. Most of them suggest that her face has been scarred, beyond the aid of make-up.

JIMMIE FIDLER

Hollywood, June 15.—Agent Vic Orsatti is pricing diamonds, a warning for reporters to keep an eye on Helen Gilbert's left hand . . . Ida Lupino is asking release from her Para contract, which calls for 3-a-year; she's a sick gal . . . Hmmmm! Hedy Lamarr and Joan Bennett are sharing the same extra servant on house-cleaning day! . . . Ruth Hussey has aired John Shelton in favor of Raphael Hakim.

Gary Cooper rented his own horse to C. B. de Mille for "North West Mounted Police"—and is donating the $1,800 rental price to Red Cross . . . Are Steffi Duna and Dennis O'Keefe altarranging, as their intimates vow? . . . Bill Frawley, a stockholder in the Hollywood baseball club, is eastbound on a talent search for a catcher and outfielder . . . RKO is trying to borrow Ann Sothern from M-G-M for reteaming with Gene Raymond.

Ben Hecht didn't mean his mean Hollywood puns—he's bought a house here . . . Max Ree, top set designer weds the veddy social Virginia Perrot this week . . . NYers say Al Jolson is revolving among Ruby Keeler, Jinx Falkenberg and Bdwy dancer Gloria Cook . . . Wendy Barrie is receiving NY phone calls from a wealthy Rumanian steel man, George Herascu.

Smart crackers who've been ribbing Director William Dieterle for his constant white gloves will blush to learn it's because his hands are still tender from mustard gas poisoning during the last war . . . Paramount is juggling dynamite with its plan again to costar Dorothy Lamour and Bob Preston, former sweeties who are very former.

LAUGH OF THE WEEK: A friend of Samuel Goldwyn asked the producer what he should name his new baby boy. Goldwyn pondered a moment, then suggested "Montmorency" as a possible and "high sounding" moniker. "But, Sam," argued the friend, "don't you think it would be better to call him something simple, like Bill or Joe?" "For heaven's sake, no!" cried Goldwyn. "Why, every Tom, Dick and Harry in the country is named Bill or Joe!"

PREVIEW NIGHTS: "Susan and God," Joan Crawford's best acting job, is o. k. but not b. o. Ruth Hussey clicks in it big enough to guarantee future stardom . . . "The Ghost Breakers" cinches Bob Hope as the screen's No. 1 comedian. Funniest line of the pic: Richard Carlson says: "A Zombie is a man who walks around with dead eyes, blindly following orders, not knowing what he does and not caring." Hope replies: "You mean—like Democrats?" . . . There's a move afoot to charge a dime admish to fanstands erected for crowds who gather to watch stars arrive at previews—the money to go to the Red Cross . . . "Love Honor and Oh-Baby" has little to recommend it except the title. If three or four laughs make a comedy, it's a comedy.

QUOTES AND COMMENTS: From a studio blurb: "Errol Flynn is a real sailor. He started to Guadalupe, Mexico, a few weeks ago and ended up at Coronado, Calif." Yup, that's real sailing, all right . . . Ann Sothern: "I'm through trying to impress anyone but myself." Most stars find it very easy to impress themselves, Ann . . . From a column: "Carole Landis was chosen as the 'girl most likely to succeed in a bathing suit.'" Difficult art, the movies!

HEDDA HOPPER

Hollywood, June 15.—"Going Hollywood" is a very common expression usually uttered in a tone of criticism or disapproval. It is used not only in the United States, but in foreign lands, yet it means different things to different persons. An irate parent will moan that his John and Mary have "gone Hollywood." If you ask for an explanation, he'll tell you: "They're wild, out late nights, their amusements and companions are questionable."

A woman may characterize her neighbor's costume by saying it makes her look as if she were "going Hollywood." She means that it is too flashy. Too garish make-up will label you "going Hollywood;" and so, definitely, will snobbishness. Various persons may define "going Hollywood" as "putting on a false front," "getting snooty," or "making a fool of oneself." You no doubt have your own definition of it. It almost always includes some rip-roaring change in the mode of living.

But don't think for a split second that "going Hollywood" is always something to arouse disapproval. When Mary Pickford was America's sweetheart, "going Hollywood" meant wearing your hair in baby curls whether you were 6 or 60. Nowadays, good little girls "go Hollywood" with a Shirley Temple dress or a Jane Withers' bang, and little boys bang away with a banjo—no, a "gitar" like Gene Autrey.

And don't pride yourself on being one of the few who never have "gone Hollywood." Whether you catch it in its good or bad form, the chances are that you will have it one way or another. There's practically no escape from its contagion.

Even in darkest Africa, the savages copy customs they see in ancient motion-pictures; Chinese and Japanese women as well as Europeans copy styles, hairdresses they see on the screen. You, yourself, at this moment, may be wearing a garment or ornament designed in Hollywood since it has become America's greatest style center. Every woman who wears a bandana over her hair, a halo curl, a lapel ornament, a knee-length skirt, slacks, turtle-neck sweaters, a pair of shorts and a bra for a play suit, has "gone Hollywood" in a mild way.

"Going Hollywood" may mean nothing more than following a new fad. Fads strike Hollywood just as measles, mumps or chicken pox strike less publicized towns, and there seems to be no cure but to let them run their course. Anita Loos wrote "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," so we had only blondes for years 'til Hedy Lamarr showed up—now black dye is more popular than peroxide. Tucking a scarf into an open shirt neck became such a fad among our male stars that strangers thought the whole town was in the throes of streptococcus. Ten years ago, an actress rode in an imported motor car, or she simply wasn't received. Suddenly it became the thing to run a station wagon. There are more expensive automobiles gathering dust in second-hand car lots than you can shake a stick at—you can almost own them for a dime a dozen. Now you must be sure that your auto is a different make.

All these, however, are the milder forms of Hollywooditis. Of the more severe attacks, some merely affect the one suffering from it; others affect his friends and fellow-actors to the point of mayhem, and still others not only wreck careers, but homes and lives. Like other diseases, some forms are curable, others are not.

For example, when an actor is seized with an exaggerated idea of his worth, he has "gone Hollywood in a 'beeg' way. But for his type of the disease, recovery is certain and astonishingly rapid. You only have to look at the earning power of Marlene Dietrich, Ruth Chatterton, Kay Francis, Tom Mix, Dick Barthelmess—to mention a few.

After an actress has appeared in a very successful screen role, she has been known to revise her invitation list so drastically that most of her old friends are lucky to be invited for a cup of coffee. As these are likely to include most of the people who boosted her up the ladder, her snobbishness is considered a serious symptom of one of the nastiest forms of "going Hollywood."

Living beyond one's income is a definite sign of trouble. But this brand never lasts long. If I remember correctly, Charlie Ray was one of the first to catch it. In his case, it developed into living in great extravagance, spreading money about the town, and then finding himself broke in a comparatively short time.

In the early and more naive days of preincome tax era, a motion picture actor's great desire was to duplicate in his own home the gorgeous sets on which he acted his greatest roles. The Grand Central Station was a favorite model for a front hall, and the Doge's Palace at Venice made a cozy little living room.

Abbott & Costello will leave "Streets of Paris," the World's Fair hit show, to concentrate on their radio program—in which, for the first time, they have to read the script, instead of memorizing it . . . Massey insists he's still young enough to be able to operate an antiaircraft gun, and "Mr. Lincoln" probably will do it.

Linda Lee, wife of Kermit Bloomgarten, the producer, just returned from a cross-country tour with the Bob Ripley show . . . In Santa Fe, New Mex., she attended a reception for the Ripley cast, given after the performance, and was introduced to a Mrs. John E. Miles . . . "You sang those Spanish songs perfectly," Mrs. Miles complimented. "Are you Spanish?" . . . "No, I'm not," Linda answered. "I just memorized those words, that's all. And you—do you live in New Mexico?" . . . "Yes, I do," Mrs. Miles replied. "Believe it or not—my husband is the Governor."

David Selznick visited Herman Mankiewicz's home and discussed the success of "Gone With the Wind" . . . "It's doing marvelously," Selznick enthused. "In Reading, Pa., for instance, 70 per cent of the population already saw the picture." . . . "What about the other 30 per cent?" Selznick was asked. "We found," he answered, "that they consisted of the unemployed, illiterate, and . . ." "And," suggested Mankiewicz, "people who think they've already seen it."

This is the story of what happened to the 16 members of the Radziwill family, members of the Polish nobility and related to Count Jerzy Potocki, Poland's Ambassador to America . . . The Radziwills were trapped in that portion of Poland which Stalin's troops occupied. They were captured, and treated by the Russian troops in the manner nobility always is treated in true Soviet dreams. Their cells were dark, and the bread served them was mouldy and garbage-smeared . . . Through the intervention of the Queen of Italy, however, they were ordered rescued and treated in the manner to which they were accustomed. The Radziwills therefore were startled when their captors installed them in an elegant hotel suite, and caviar and champagne set before them. For this was the Soviet conception of the way of living to which all members of the nobility are accustomed.

The news from abroad has taken its toll of Molly Picon, the star of "Morning Star." She has had many sleepless nights, but never realized the effects, until recently . . . Molly has a special routine she delievers at parties and concerts—in which she recites the audience's reactions to her appearance onstage. It begins: "Hm, hm, look at her. Molly must be at least 50." . . . This has been a laugh-getter for years. Within the past few weeks, however, that line drew no laughs, at all. Last week, at the Drama League's reception, Molly changed the line, and again it was a laugh-getter. She changed it to "Molly must be at least 60."

When Sam Goldwyn returned from Honolulu on the S. S. Lurline, the captain learned that the producer was celebrating a birthday, and notified the chef—who surprised Goldwyn by presenting him with a huge birthday cake . . . The cake was brought by a crew of waiters who waited for Goldwyn's beam of approval. But that beam was still-born. For the chef, unaware of Goldwyn's United Artists affiliations, had designed a lion perched atop a Happy Birthday slogan, and circled it with the carefully-spaced name, "Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer."

Knudsen and Stettinius, now members of the Defense Council, already had met Leon Henderson, a third member of that council. Henderson had both of them on the witness-stand, during his monopoly-probe hearings . . . Don Nelson, who will do the purchasing for the Defense Council, received overtures from the Japanese government less than six months ago—and rejected all their blandishments . . . Moss Hart is a flu victim . . . Ernest Hemingway will decide this week whether he'll accept the war-correspondent's job offered to him.

F. D. R. jr.: Will you pay me that bet now, or after the convention? . . . Sylvia Sidney: Your sister-in-law, Stella Adler, is leaving for Hollywood this month. She says she's going for some sun—and a contract. She's willing to compromise, though—for rain, and a contract . . . Charlie McCarthy: One of your foremost rivals for top ranking in radio, soon will retire, until he recovers his health. He's being treated by specialists now . . . CAA: Maria Kramer, who owns that chain of hotels, has started a new movement. She selected one ambitious young man, and is paying for his schooling at an aviation school. She's getting a group of wealthy men, each to pay the tuition for other such youngsters, to relieve the Government of a burden in this emergency.

THIS NEW YORK

The story is going the rounds about the young thing, not quite sophisticated in the ways of the world, but willing to learn, who was entertained at a night club by some admirers, and at the same time initiated into the art of drinking. The drink was a particularly powerful cocktail, of which she did not at first quite catch the name, but each time another round was ordered she heard her host tell the waiter "La meme chose!" A short time later she was taken out to dinner again, and when her host inquired what kind of drink she would like she said she wasn't quite sure but she thought she would prefer "one of those wonderful 'La meme chose cocktails!'"

One of Broadway's more celebrated ordinaries is this week celebrating its twentieth anniversary under a variety of managements. Antoine's in New Orleans is, to be sure, at the moment celebrating its centenary, but 20 years is a ripe age in Broadway, where change is the perpetual order of the day. It is a toss-up whether the West Forty-eighth street restaurant is better known for its steaks, chops and chickens or for the many legends which have sprung up concerning the prominent Broadwayites and sporting crowd who meet there for dinner and after-theater supper, as they have been doing for 20 years.

Billy La Hiff, "Broadway's favorite son," who was host at the Tavern until his death in 1934, had what is known in the trade as "a big following." Genial, smiling and soft-spoken, he was known also as a soft touch. He knew how to cater to his particular clientele. They liked the soft lights, the food, and they spent their time and money freely.

The service was perfect. The waiters knew their business. Three of them—Pat Geraghty, George Gates and Jack Spooner—were survivors of the flying wedge that was renowned in Jack's Restaurant on Sixth Avenue during the old days for its masterful technique in ejecting objectionable inebriates.

Today, after many changes in ownership, the Tavern has passed into the hands of two show people, George Kelly and Charlie Adler, who are perhaps best known as two of the Yacht Club Boys. In their travels with the Yacht Club Boys Kelly and Adler have dined on the food of every nation. They have innumerable friends in show business. They feel the combination is a formidable one for hosts at a restaurant which caters to show people.

In one corner of the Tavern is a place famous in sporting history, the table where Jack Kearns said to Jack Dempsey, "You quit Estelle Taylor or you quit me," thus ending their relationship. It was there, too, that Willard Mack discovered Mae Clarke and Barbara Stanwyck, placing the latter in "The Noose" and starting her on the road to fame.

Today, just as always, actors sit around in little groups during the afternoon, rehearsing their new roles. Producers like Dwight Deere Wiman, Joshua Logan and Edward Duryea Dowling peruse their latest batch of scripts while dining there. The sports writers and humorists—Damon Runyon, Bugs Baer, Dan Parker—all of them still find the quiet atmosphere, the oak-paneled walls and the "red-blooded" food to their liking, although one famous Tavern custom has been discontinued. That was to supply the fighters at Madison Square Garden a special brew whenever an important ring encounter was scheduled.

Kelly and Adler have made one innovation since taking over the management. For late eaters they offer free "midnight snacks" at the bar. Scrambled eggs with sausage, corned beef hash and chicken a la king are a few of the sturdy delicacies which greet after-theater customers at the bar. On the regular menu, the Tavern has established long-standing fame with its daily specialties, among which our particular favorites always have been Tuesday's corned beef and cabbage and Thursday's chicken pot pie.

Margaret Pemberton is telling about the vastly wealthy California woman who returned to the United States recently from many years of residence on the Riviera. She reopened her huge home on the Coast, which she hadn't seen in two decades, and later was telling Mrs. Pemberton about it. "It was so full of surprises," she said. "You know, only the other day I was doing a little dusting around. I'm the homey type, and the servants never seem to get around to all 60 rooms, and what do you think I discovered in the north drawing room? A pipe organ!"

Around The Town: The French Pavilion at the Fair this season is still the essence of chic, and is as beautifully run as ever. The restaurant is just as distinguished as ever, with its fine view of the fountain and fireworks, and while one might expect to encounter gloom and long faces on the personnel, the good manners and cheerfulness of the whole staff are intact. Dining there is one of the gastronomic wonders of New York . . . Daphne Bull, who always has startled friends by being an expert harp player and sends her instrument to parties in a truck ahead of herself, made her professional debut last week with huge success at Marianne Oswald's recital of sketches. Mrs. Bull, who is the wife of Town and Country's competent Harry Bull, always has been one of the town's most exotic dressers, and the harp gives an added cachet of accomplished smartness . . . The most exciting change in the Fifth avenue facade since the planting of the new trees along Radio City is the face-lifting of the Pierre undertaken by Franklin Hughes. Hughes, Mary Anita Loos, Melo, the waiter-captain from Monte Carlo, and Jim, the barman, there, have given the premises a great shake-up, with huge boxwood obeliaks outside and with tricky lighting and growing orchids all over . . . Local shops are promoting something called a Fiberglass necktie, made of spun glass and warranted to be fireproof, acid-proof, stainproof and wrinkleproof, just the thing for Wollcott Gibbs, who inclines to set fire to himself while smoking in bed, or for the well-dressed victim of an acid throwing . . . Local medicos report a marked increase in nervous collapses, and allied disorders owing to war hysteria.

Number of Satisfactory New Plays Insufficient To Meet Demand for Properly Lively Stage

By Richard Watts, jr.

New York.

Now that the dramatic season has limped safely to a conclusion, the time has come for the usual post mortem.

Today, then, let us contemplate the playwrights, who necessarily are the backbone of a sensible theater, and see how they have fared in the period in the drama that has just passed into history. The lamentable thing is that there aren't enough of them. The sturdy veterans among our dramatists continue to labor for us manfully, and they are not being properly supported by newcomers, with the result that too little fresh blood is coming into the theater and the number of satisfactory new plays is not nearly sufficient to meet the demand for a properly lively stage.

Fortunately, although the neophyte playwrights are not numerous, they make up for it in excellence, for William Saroyan and James Thurber have added more than their share to the pleasure and the vitality of the season.

In fact, Mr. Saroyan has added so much freshness of imagination, richness of humor and heartiness of spirit to a drama greatly in need of those qualities that it seems to me only proper that such strange bedfellows as the New York Drama Critics' Circle and the Pulitzer Prize Committee should agree in giving him their awards for the year.

His "The Time of Your Life" was creatively the most distinctive new play of the season, and it added new qualities of heart and soul to our theater. His other comedy, "Love's Old Sweet Song," was less important dramatically, but it was even more fun than the Saroyan barroom epic. A gay, mad extravaganza, filled with delightful characters and magnificent comic invention, beautifully played and with a remarkable accompanying score by Paul Bowles, "Love's Old Sweet Song" was a rich and rare delight, and it is one of the theater's tragedies that it met with such little success.

I can only attribute its hasty demise to the lateness of its arrival and to the curiously cold notices it received from so many critics who should know better, for such audiences as it drew obviously loved it.

Of the serious plays, the most important was—and is, for that matter—Mr. Sherwood's "There Shall Be No Night."

This earnest and heartfelt testament of a fighting liberal owes much of its interest to its timeliness, for, even though it deals with the Russian assault upon Finland which now seems such ancient history, it is thinking chiefly of Nazi savagery and its challenge to all of us.

There are those who would hold the timeliness against it, although that is its outstanding virtue, and there are those that overrate it for the same reason. My own impression is that it is a dignified, moving and eloquent play that has the great distinction of looking at the world about it, the world of horror, doom and fear, with a fine, clear-eyed combination of passionate indignation and frank intelligence; that it expresses the viewpoint of the sane liberal with forthrightness and decent emotion, if perhaps too much optimism. Nevertheless, it is foolish to deny that it is in some ways a faulty play, that its second act is not its strong point, and that it is clearly inferior to "Abe Lincoln in Illinois"—which remains the finest statement of the liberal position in the modern drama.

The only other new play of the season that dealt with tragic contemporary events with any success was Ernest Hemingway's "The Fifth Column." Although Benjamin Glazer's adaptation added a Hollywood love story that was a grave interruption of what Mr. Hemingway had to say, enough of the spirit and atmosphere of heroic Madrid of the days of the Fascist assault upon Spain remained to make "The Fifth Column" a powerful and striking work, even before the connotation of its title had come to mean so much to all of us.

Despite the delays from which it suffered, it is possible that the Hemingway drama was produced too soon. For apparently it is only now that we are beginning to recognize that the attack on Spain was the first act in the Fascist assault on the democratic world, and that the democracies lost the first battle, not in Poland or Norway or Flanders, but when they turned their backs on the Spanish Republic. One of the fine things about the Hemingway play is the fact that such a belief was implicit in it, and gave it forcefulness and contemporary import.

* * * *

Chiefly, of course, the season relied on comedy. In addition to Mr. Saroyan's "The Time of Your Life Life" and "Love's Old Sweet Song," there are "The Male Animal," by James Thurber and Elliott Nugent; "The Man Who Came to Dinner," by George Kaufman and Moss Hart, and "Life With Father," by Russel Crouse and Howard Lindsay. Of the three, "The Male Animal" seems to me the best, combining hilarity with high good sense to a striking degree, and offering in its famous drinking scene, one of the fine comic episodes of recent years.

The Kaufman-Hart comedy was a fabricated work that somehow seemed manufactured rather than written but it revealed the brittle modern wit of insult at just about its most brilliant. "Life With Father" shows every sign of becoming the best loved comedy of our time, and it is truly a warm and winning show. I have the feeling, though, that if it were a better play it would be less fun, for then it would delve deeper into Father's domestic tyranny and show it as something less engaging than Mr. Crouse and Mr. Lindsay make it.

To Miss Claire Boothe goes the credit for writing the first successful anti-Nazi play, the comedy-melodrama called "Margin for Error." A lively combination of barbed insult and detective story and containing in the character of the Jewish policeman the first likable figure its authoress has managed to create. "Margin for Error" was a good show, if a negligible play, and I enjoyed it more than anything Miss Boothe has written.

The other plays to be briefly contemplated were less successful. Maxwell Anderson's "Key Largo," for example, revealed its author's poetic style functioning with considerable eloquence and forcefulness, but the author's discussion of the plight of the man who can find nothing worth dying for, a topic of great contemporary import, was swamped in muddiness and confusion and ended in futility.

Elmer Rice's "Two on An Island" had humor, charm and keen observation, but lacked dramatic pointedness; Clifford Odets' "Night Music" was better in its parts than as a whole; Paul Osborn's "Morning's at Seven" was fine in its detail, but ineffectual in its drama; Sidney Kingsley's "The World We Make" was realistically observed, but not movingly enough written; Samson Raphaelson's "Skylark" was just a vehicle for Miss Lawrence, and such impressive people as Miss Doorthy Thompson, George M. Cohan, Vincent Sheean, Albert Bein, Robert Ardrey, Ben Hecht, Charles MacArthur, Paul Vincent Carroll, Bernard Shaw, John Van Druten and Frederick Lonsdale fell down on us sadly.

From tragic Europe came only one play of any interest, that excellent murder melodrama, "Ladies in Retirement," by Edward Percy and Reginald Denham.

Jolson Backs Own Comedy With $100,000

By Mark Barron.

New York, June 15 (AP).—Al Jolson, wearing a lounging robe that would make the average man leap to his feet in amazement, paced the floor and thoughtfully contemplated $100,000—a hundred thousand one-dollar bills. He was back on Broadway after a long absence and on Broadway a man must consider carefully the investment of a one-dollar bill.

Jolson is a Broadway institution and the news that he is returning is as important as the facts that Irving Berlin has composed a new musical score and that George M. Cohan has written a play that is a failure (which both happened. Berlin's new score for "Louisiana Purchase" is a success and Cohan's new version of "The Tavern" was a failure).

Jolson's new show, which he calls a "mammoth musicomedy," will first tour into Detroit and Chicago, and then come to Broadway in August. This show, "Hold On to Your Hats," has $100,000 of his own money to back it, but he doesn't like to be referred to as an "angel." Jolson is like Cohan that way; he pays for the show with his own money so no outside manager can dictate to him how he shall stage the musical. But he likes it to be kept a secret that he is also, as well as being star, the man with the money bags.

It has been nearly ten years since Jolson made his last appearance on Broadway in "Wonder Bar," not so long after he made the first talking picture in "The Jazz Singer." Even in that early age, Jolson wanted to be a producer and enlisted the bank rolls of Irving Bernie, Phil Baker and a few others of his pals to finance "Wonder Bar." It was a fair success and probably came through without a loss.

Miss Goddard's Figure Is Voted America's Ideal

South American movie fans, who have been calling for more upholstery on America's feminine movie stars, are evidently doomed to disappointment according to the verdict of six famous American artists.

These artists picked Paulette Goddard, who weighs a mere 110 pounds as compared with the 138-pounds of Venus, as the "girl with the most beautiful body in the world," and the ideal face and figure for American movies.

Artists making the choices were Jefferson Machamer, whose "Machamer girl" is famous; Gladys Parker, artist and designer of clothes for exotic screen stars; Dan Sayre Groesbeck, whose paintings hang in the Louvre and many American museums as well; Walter Alexander Bailey, one of America's foremost painters; Lyle Wheeler, winner of this year's Academy award for art direction; and Helen Carleton, who has painted Vivien Leigh, Miss Goddard and other stars for films, the paintings later going into art galleries throughout the country.

Visiting Miss Goddard on the set where she is working with Bob Hope in "The Ghost Breakers," the six artists made their selection and indicated that the award may be made an annual one.

Pointers Win Favor After Film Release

Judging from all indications, the pointer is going to be the next popular pet among dog lovers.

Paramount is being deluged with letters from persons who have seen Billy Lee and Promise in "The Biscuit Eater," asking for information on pointers, their price, their size, their docility, and the location of kennels selling such dogs.

The Rin-Tin-Tin pictures made the German Shepherd—police dog—the most popular dog in the country for a while. The early "Thin Man" pictures caused the wire-haired terrier to soar into popularity. The St. Bernard was popularized by "The Call of the Wild." When FBO made "Laddie," the collie became the pet of the country. The Scotty soared into popularity after "Sylvia Scarlett" was released.

The Cinema Retraces Its World War Steps

The Screen Formula Followed Shortly Prior To April, 1917, Was Identical With That Being Pursued Today, the Record Shows

By Nelson B. Bell

IT IS A DISQUIETING circumstance, which may or may not be a sinister augury for the future, that a present vague and undeveloped "trend" in motion picture production retraces with minute accuracy the shape of things as they were shortly before the entry of the United States into the First World War.

BELL

While it is no part of the duty of this department to sound alarms or make prophecies, it can do no harm to examine the record and make a note of whatever may bear out our forebodings.

Those with long memories will recall that during the months immediately preceding our participation in the European hostilities of 1914-18, the American screen was heavy with pictures laying vigorous accent upon every phase of the war that might bolster this country's enthusiasm for the cause of the Allies. Among those which spring most vividly to mind were "The Battle Cry of Peace," depicting with terrifying realism what would happen to our Eastern seaboard once the inevitable German invasion got under way; "The Unbeliever," dedicated to the barbarity of the Hun, with Erich von Stroheim as its chief protagonist; D. W. Griffith's tear-drenched "Hearts of the World," and that apotheosis of hate, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," directed by Rupert Julian, who also had the temerity to play the title role.

Here were a series of pictures that leveled devastating barrages at the Central Powers with particular stress upon the ruthlessness and inhumanity of the German Emperor and his blood-thirsty hordes. They exercised so wide and so deep an influence upon American thought and behavior that they engaged the interested attention of Mr. George Creel and his wartime Committee on Public Information—impressed it so profoundly with the power of the screen as an instrument of propaganda, in fact, that in April, 1917, the Committee itself participated actively in the production and exhibition of pictures and a little later set up its Film Division, devoted exclusively to that purpose. History once again seems to be repeating itself.

The Motion Picture Industry Paves the Way

AS WAS THE CASE a quarter-century ago, the films so far released with a direct bearing upon the issues at stake on the other side in the present war have been the commercial output of the motion picture industry, presumably with no word either pro or con from the Federal Government. They have, nevertheless, followed the exact pattern of the earlier procedure. Washington has eloquent evidence of this in its current cinema programs.

In "The Mortal Storm," now on view on the screen at Loew's Palace, may be found the counterpart of "The Battle Cry of Peace" and "The Unbeliever," although its subject matter is social rather than military. No less forcefully on that account, it visualizes with shattering effect the consequences of Hitlerism and the complete disruption of civilization, as we have known it, which it represents. "The Confessions of a Nazi Spy," in unabridged and sharper form, at the Metropolitan, dwells with similar emphasis upon the dangers of the Fifth Column, the modern magnification of what in the last war was known merely as espionage. The 1940 carbon copy of 1917's "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," which came off the screen only last night at the Mount Vernon drive-in theater, over in Virginia, is "Hitler, the Beast of Berlin," although one suspects, without having seen it, that it may lack something of the productional excellence that marked its predecessor.

While there are Government-made propaganda films that do not find their way into the commercial theaters, there is no lack of short-reel promotion of American interests in them on that account. The Warner Brothers have made a long list of Technicolor patriotic subjects that possess the additional virtue of being superlative entertainment. So have others of the major producers, although in lesser numbers than the indefatigable Freres Warner.

The next release of the "March of Time" will be devoted in its entirety to the "U. S. Navy—1940" and a recent issue in the "Popular Science" series went to some length to reassure the Nation in the matter of American airplane superiority and the potentialities of American production.

When, if at all, the Federal Establishment wishes to reenter the motion picture business in the interest of public enlightenment and national defense—as it did in 1917—it will find the road well prepared and easy to travel.

Today's Films More Rationalized Than 1917's

IT IS CONSPICUOUSLY in their favor that the present-day pictures dealing with topics closely bound up in the fundamental purposes of the war now raging in Europe indulge in none of the rabble-rousing extravagances and exaggerations of the 1917 crop.

"Nurse Edith Cavell" was highly lauded for its discreet understatement of facts that might have stamped it immediately as deliberately and malignantly on the side of anti-German propaganda, if fully exposed. The events surrounding the death of the martyred angel of mercy were more damning than the film represented them to be.

The same is largely true of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picturization of Phyllis Bottome's "The Mortal Storm." The burning of the books held inimical to Hitlerism and the totalitarian State, the persecution of a single distinguished family and the pathos and tragedy of a strictly personalized story result in a far more moving and convincing drama than might have been evolved from a far-flung panorama of dictatorial savagery, mass murder and racial annihilation.

"The Confessions of a Nazi Spy," of course, is of a little different stripe, although I am able to recall nothing in its original version that departed seriously from the sensational disclosures made by the Government's spy ring investigation and prosecutions. The reissued version now on view is said to have reinstated deletions made at the time of the picture's initial release as a sop to Nazi "good will"—as if there were any such thing!

The Stage, Also, Has Done Its Bit of Warning

THE SCREEN has not been alone in preparing the public mind for whatever shocks it may be called upon to face in a near or distant future. The stage has done its part, too, even if not quite so prolifically as the cinema.

Clare Boothe was first in the field last season with her witheringly scornful anti-Nazi comedy of "Margin for Error." Ernest Hemingway followed shortly after with "The Fifth Column" and Robert E. Sherwood, toward the season's end, did the theater and the country a mighty service by presenting his magnificently optimistic drama of Finland, "There Shall Be No Night." For a scholarly contemplation of these works I refer you to Mr. Richard Watts, jr., in other columns of this section of today's Sunday Post.

If all this, as past experience seems to point, outlines the shape of things to come, at least we have been forewarned.

River Outings

One of the most enjoyable and healthful ways in which the city vacationist can invest his leisure hours is to take a long, cool boat ride on the Wilson Line's new streamliner, the S. S. Mount Vernon.

The streamliner offers a variety of river trips, leaving each day at 9:30 a. m. and 2 p. m. for Mount Vernon and Marshall Hall Park. Visitors at Mount Vernon are given an hour and a half in which to inspect the historic shrine and roam the beautiful grounds and lovely gardens.

The Moonlight Cruise sails each evening at 8:30, and there is free dancing to the swingy rhythm of McWilliams Orchestra under the direction of Davy Crocker.

Atlas

"The Pine Ridge Hillbillies," a complete mountain-music revue, will be the stage attraction today and tomorrow at the Atlas Theater, sharing the billing with a double feature screen attraction.

Grandpappy, Ezra, Arabella ("The Country Cousin") and the Two Nitwits are the principals in this group of entertainers. As an innovation to their hill music, the group also presents a blackface comedian.

Joan Blondell, George Murphy and Lana Turner star on the screen in "Two Girls on Broadway" and Warren William and Joan Perry are featured in "The Lone Wolf Strikes Back."

Irene Dunne and Cary Grant, costars of "My Favorite Wife," the current comedy hit on the screen at RKO-Keith's.

Glen Echo Park Boasts Artists In Dance Band

Musicianship Is Life To Two Soloists in Carnival Surroundings

When a boy or girl enters the professional musical world through the inspiration of one of the great masters, it is usually the beginning of a fine career. It is musicianship from the sheer joy and genuine love of melody. With aul Kain's Spanish Garden Orchestra at Glen Echo are two such musicians: Bill Gibson, guitar expert, and Ken Foy, pianist.

Gibson was born December 31, 1913, at Savannah, Ga. His family moved to Wilkes-Barre, Pa., where at the age of 13, Bill began his musical training. At that time his ambition was to be a concert banjoist. At the age of 16, he was playing with the Wilkes-Barre Symphony Orchestra of 67 musicians. He remained there for one entire season under Pampilio Forlano, director.

However, his ambition to be a great banjoist was forgotten when, in 1934, he heard the late Eddie Lang play the guitar. Later he heard the great concert guitarist, Andres Segoria. The inspiration of these two artists convinced Gibson that the guitar was the greatest of all instruments. He agreed with Beethoven that a guitar is a "miniature orchestra."

Kenneth Foy was inspired by the great Paderewski to make music a career. Born in Baltimore, he attended Baltimore City College. He studied piano to please his parents, disliking it greatly. But shortly after his thirteenth birthday, his parents took him to the Lyric Theater in Baltimore to hear Paderewski. From that moment he was interested in the piano. Foy joined Paul Kain in January, 1938, and has been with him ever since.

A true carnival spirit is given Glen Echo Park by the appearance of the Flying Scooter's cars. To the person who has never ridden the Flying Scooter, the ride may appear dangerous. However, it is one of the safest devices found anywhere. It is carefully examined every day. The newest Glen Echo ride, it was brought from the New York World's Fair.

The park has more than 50 different amusement attractions, and admission and parking are free.

Animals Need Makeup, Too; Newt Jons Tells How It's Done

By the Associated Press

Hollywood, June 15.—Newt Jons would prefer that the news isn't spread around, but he's fast becoming Hollywood's premiere animal makeup man.

Newt has talent at greasepainting humans, too. He's not so enthused about the animal business because, he explains, "if I get too good at it, I'll be assigned nothing else. And I'll have no one to talk to."

His latest job was making a sprightly 3-year-old race horse into a 20-year-old. He created a mane of unkempt crepe hair, curried the animal's natural hair in an upsweep, then suggested a spotlight in the horse's eyes. To avoid the light it dropped its head. It was a picture of age.

Jons has other notable achievements to his credit. A familiar sight on films sets is a deodorized skunk, "Stinky." "Stinky" had had been used so frequently, carried by his tail, that the hair had worn off. It looked very unskunklike. With a handful of black horsehair and a little paste, Jons made it like new.

A tiger transformation was Jons best. The scene pictured a tiger rushing through a crowd of extras. The director knew no extras would risk the real thing. So Newt went to work.

Taking a Great Dane, Newt molded a tiger's head of plastics, painted srtipes on the dog's body. When he finished, another tiger would have had difficulty telling the difference.

The girl it cost $2,000,000 to make glamorous, just so film fans could decide they didn't like her that way, is back in pictures—doing the thing she's always wanted to do.

"This part," says Anna Sten, "it has character. I have wanted to do character."

Sam Goldwyn imported the blonde Russian girl with the pretty round face to play the exotic "Nana" seven years ago.

She had a buildup the equal of which Hollywood had never seen. But Goldwyn had overlooked some things. For one, Anna couldn't speak English. It took months to teach her, while the trumpeting that had heralded her arrival went on, expensively.

For another, glamour just wasn't her forte, or so the movie-going public felt. She simply didn't click. Other efforts in a like vein received the same reception. So Hollywood pointed the finger at her and decreed that she was through.

Anna retired with her husband, the one-time European Film Producer Eugene Frenke, to Santa Monica. Hollywood may have given her the go-by, but she liked America. She decided to become a citizen.

Not long ago she received her final papers. Through the five years or so while her name was being forgotten she devoted her time to homemaking, with one quick trip to England for a picture, and occasional jaunts to Frenke's quicksilver mine in Nevada.

"But always," she says in English, now almost without accent, "I was waiting. An actress never stops wanting to work. Now I have another chance."

The new Anna is the "other woman" in "I Married a Nazi." Gone are the lavish gowns of "Nana." She wears simple costumes, and only a few of them.

She's hopeful the role will mean a new start for her. She'd like nothing better than to become the sort of star Goldwyn once visioned her.

"But it's not essential," she smiles. "For I learned several years ago I can be so happy just being a wife—maybe happier."

If you don't believe those stories about the rough, tough Dalton boys, just ask Randolph Scott, who's no softie himself.

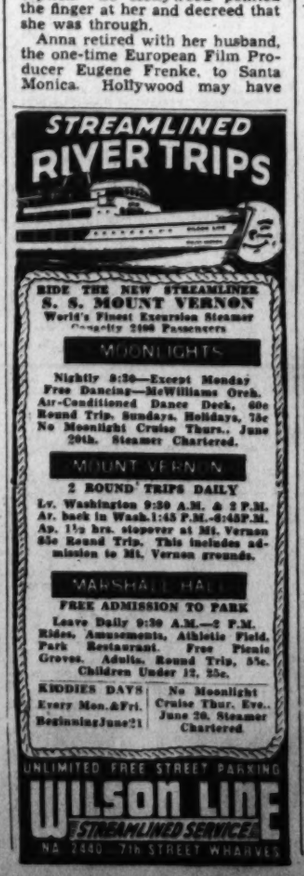
The Dalton boys, Universal version, are Brian Donlevy, Broderick Crawford, Stuart Erwin and Frank Albertson. There are few "heavies" hereabouts any heavier than Donlevy and Crawford.

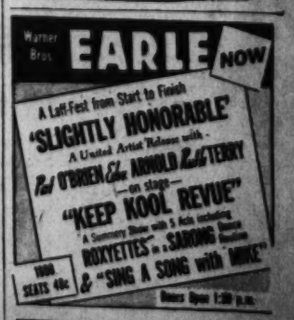
In one scene for "The Daltons Ride Again," Scott, a law school graduate, comes back to the Kansas town he hasn't seen since a boy, and meets his old playmates, blossoming into full-fledged desperadoes.

The script called for an effusive greeting, with much pounding and backslapping. By the twelfth retake, the brothers were experts at the cordial welcome. As Scott tells it:

"That big moose Crawford punches me in the ribs. Donlevy lets me have an elbow on the other side. Erwin's supposed to pull my hat down. He does it with his fist. I've been seeing stars the last six takes. And Albertson, who's told to pat my shoulder, pats my chin with his knuckles. Boy, this has ceased to be fun."

He'd probably have thought it even less funny if he'd heard Director George Marshall's whispered instruction to print the eighth retake. It was O. K.





THE OLD FAMILY HORSE-HAIRLOOM

"He would fancy that he heard the muffled stamp of a hoof on the hardwood floor"

By Weare Holbrook

Playing Stableboy to a Horsehair Sofa Wasn't So Bad—Until it Began to Neigh and Stepped on His Foot. Then Ditherton Refused to Stall Any Longer

"After half an hour on it, he could sympathize with his great-grandfather"

When Mr. Ditherton's Aunt Bessie wrote him that she had decided to break up housekeeping and go to live with her niece in California, Mr. Ditherton replied that he thought it was an excellent idea. But on receiving her second letter, he wasn't so sure.

"Dear Archie," she wrote. "I have decided that you ought to have the old horsehair sofa. It is the sofa your great-grandfather died on, and it has been in the family so long I can't bear the thought of selling it to strangers, so am having it shipped to you. You can look for it any time now."

Both Mr. and Mrs. Ditherton looked, with some anxiety. Their apartment was small and severely modernistic. They suspected that a horsehair sofa, however quaintly charming, might strike a jarring note in the decor.

And when at last it stood uncrated in the center of the streamlined living room, their suspicions were confirmed. The sofa's short mahogany legs were covered with sculptured shrubbery; its curving headrest arched high and terminated in something that resembled an oversized jelly roll; the black haircloth covering looked damp and oily.

"It really is rather impressive—in a funereal way," conceded Mrs. Ditherton.

"It's genuine American," her husband added encouragingly.

"Early and curly," she sighed. "What it needs is a room to itself, with flowered wallpaper and carpets and whatnots."

How about putting it in the bedroom?"

"There wouldn't be space enough for it when the Murphy beds are down. No, we'll just have to leave it here for the time being," said Mrs. Ditherton. "Perhaps eventually we can make the whole room early American."

Mr. Ditherton agreed that this might be the logical solution of the problem, and immediately cashed in his hoard of cigarette coupons for a model of a Yankee clipper ship, which he placed on the living room mantel.

But the ship model didn't help matters much. Neither did the Currier and Ives prints that Mrs. Ditherton hung on either side of the mantel. The sofa remained an ever-present anachronism. Its black hulk dominated the scene; it loomed incongruously in the center of the room, like some prehistoric monster.

Mr. Ditherton appreciated his wife's tolerant attitude toward it. He felt that, as Aunt Bessie was his aunt, he was to blame for the whole thing in a way—and he hid this lurking sense of guilt in a display of rather specious enthusiasm over the old sofa.

"You know, it really isn't so bad when you get accustomed to it," he remarked brightly. "I've seen worse sofas in some of these swell antique shops."

Mr. Ditherton even tried taking his afternoon nap on it, to prove that it had utility if not beauty; but after half an hour on its hard convexity, he could sympathize with his great-grandfather. For one thing, it was narrow and slippery; for another, the headrest arched upward with an abruptness that gave him a crick in the neck. And worst of all was the horsehair covering; it looked as smooth as satin, but the moment he lay down on it 10,000 little bristles began boring through his clothing and tickling his spine.

Also, there was something disturbingly animate about the old sofa. When you sat down on it, it sighed like a living creature; its ancient springs coughed and moaned in protest against the slightest pressure. Lying on it, Mr. Ditherton often imagined that he felt a rhythmic pulsation within it, as if a heart were beating.

Adventure in the Dark

Once while groping in the dark for the lamp cord, his hand had unexpectedly encountered the smooth flank of the sofa, and he had leaped backward with a yell. It had quivered at his touch, like a high-spirited horse; he could have sworn it.

On another occasion when he was helping his wife clean house, he had lifted up one end of the sofa so that she could pull the rug out; then he had set it down exactly where it had stood before. But he received a crushing impact on his toes, an impact that left him limping for a week. The sofa had deliberately reached out with one of its carved mahogany feet—and stepped on him!

Thereafter, Mr. Ditherton avoided the family heirloom, but he was always uncomfortably conscious of its presence. Sometimes in the evening he would sit across the room and stare at it intently. As he looked, its contours seemed to change. The arch of the headrest grew longer, and among its curves he could see a fringe of mane, an eye, a nostril. The mahogany legs grew longer, too, and their sculptured decorations took on the appearance of spavins and fetlocks. He would fancy that he heard the muffled stamp of a hoof on the hardwood floor, and smelled the pungent fragrance of the stable. But by daylight, it was only a sofa—and he could laugh at his hallucinations of the night before.

There came a day, however, when Mr. Ditherton began to doubt his own sanity. That was the afternoon he arrived home and found not one sofa, but too.

"Angela!" he said tensely. "Do you see what I see? Are there really two of them?"

Mrs. Ditherton nodded, and burst into tears. "It came this morning from Cousin Mabel, with a note," she sobbed. "She said she'd heard I was doing over the living room in early American, so she wanted me to have her old horsehair sofa. It's been in the family for g-generations.

The newly arrived sofa was almost exactly like the first one—a bit heavier, perhaps, but no lovelier. "Oh, well, we'll manage somehow," said Mr. Ditherton with forced cheeriness. "If we move it over here against the wall, there will be plenty of room to get through to the kitchenette."

As he pushed it across the floor, there came a piercing sound. Mr. Ditherton straightened. "What was that?" he asked sharply.

"I don't know," said Mrs. Ditherton, dabbing at her eyes. "A squeaky caster, I suppose. Why?"

"It sounded like a whinny," replied her husband, slowly. "The whinny of a horse." He mused for a moment. "Listen, Angela—we've got to get away from these sofas. Let's go away for awhile. Let's go to a big, up-to-date hotel, where everything belongs to a corporation—and there are no family heirlooms!"

The Whinny Wins

That very afternoon the Dithertons packed their trunks, locked up the apartment, and moved to the St. Ginsberg Arms Hotel. They didn't like it much, but at least there were no horsehair sofas at the St. Ginsberg Arms. They stayed there for more than a year before they felt the first twinges of nostalgia.

Then one morning Mrs. Ditherton announced that she was going back to the apartment, "just to take a look around and see that everything's all right." And later in the day at his office, Mr. Ditherton received a telephone call from her. There was a note of suppressed excitement in her voice. "Archie," she said, "come right home as soon as you get through work. I have a surprise for you."

At 5 o'clock Mr. Ditherton hurried over to the apartment. His wife met him at the door, a sphinx-like expression on her face. He glanced nervously about the living room; it was as streamlined and spacious as it had ever been. "The sofas!" he cried delightedly. "They're gone!" Then a shadow darkened his brow. "You didn't sell them, did you, Angela? After all, they were family heirlooms, and Aunt Bessie said——"

"I didn't sell them," Mrs. Ditherton assured him. "I merely had them called for and—and disposed of."

"The Salvation Army?" he inquired.

"No," she replied grimly, "the S. P. C. A.!"

Today the only family heirloom in the Ditherton household is a small mahogany footstool covered with horsehair. It is an unprepossessing object, and it does not harmonize with the rest of the apartment. But, as Mr. Ditherton asserts proudly, it comes of fine old stock—on both sides.

The Brighter Side

By DAMON RUNYON

Mr. Joe Turp writes:

Brooklyn, June 14.

Dear Sir last night when I got home from work I ses to my wife Ethel hay Ethel whats this I hear about your Uncle Ben being back? She ses yes Joe he has been back awhile. I thought I told you. I ses you know very well you never mentioned it to me Ethel and she ses didn't I Joe? Well I meant to but I guess I forgot. Did you see him Joe?

I ses no but I just heard he is around. I ses I suppose you know he did'nt go to war with that newspaper fellow like he was supposed to? She ses O yes I knew it Joe. They got on the wrong boat and it went to New Orleans instead of to the war and my uncle Ben got a job there and has been working until just a couple of weeks ago. Then he came home. He has been over to see me a couple of times already.

I ses you never mentioned that either and Ethel ses well Joe to tell you the truth I didn't think you would be interested. You never cared very much about my uncle Ben. I am afraid you do not understand him very good. I ses no I guess not. She ses I just wish you could hear him tell about New Orleans Joe. It is the most wonderful place you ever saw.

I ses if he liked it so well why did'nt he stay there? She ses because he did not want to break a ladys heart Joe. My uncle Ben is always a gentleman no matter what you think of him and if he had staid in New Orleans he would have had to break a ladys heart. Her name is Marie and she is beautiful. He ses he will miss New Orleans especially something called fizzes. You make them with gin in them and they tickle your nose like soda water Joe.

I ses yes I guess he will miss the gin fizzes all right if he was getting them for nothing and Ethel ses why do you know about them Joe? I never knew you had been in New Orleans. I ses Ethel you do not have to be in New Orleans to know about gin fizzes, I ses any bartender can make them and she ses even in Brooklyn? I ses yes even in Brooklyn and she ses O well then my uncle Ben will be very happy when he finds that out. I ses don't you worry Ethel he probably knows it better than anyone else in Brooklyn.

She ses Marie is the lady who has the little hotel in New Orleans where my uncle Ben lived Joe. She fell in love with him right away. It was pitiful the way she loved him Joe. I ses Ethel it is pitiful the way that old guy goes around thinking dames are always falling in love with him. I ses why don't he be his age? Ethel ses why Joe my uncle Ben can't help it if they fall in love with him can he? Anyway Marie is as old as he is. She is a twice widow Joe but very beautiful. She wanted to marry my uncle Ben.

I ses if she has a hotel it might have been a good idea for him to marry and settle down there and Ethel ses well it is a little hotel and the service is not very good. She charged by uncle Ben four dollars a week for a room and sometimes he could not get any hot water. Then when he was out of work for a few months and could not pay his room rent she locked his door on him and told him he could not get in until he paid her or married her.

I ses wait a minute Ethel. I ses you told me he had been working in New Orleans until a couple of weeks ago when he came home. I ses now you ses he was out of work for a few months. I ses he has only been gone a few months so how long did he work? Ethel ses well I have forgotten just how long it was he ses he worked but it was not as long as he was out of work. There is a great deal of unemployment nowadays Joe. I ses yes and your uncle Ben has most of it but how did he finally make out with that dame.

Ethel says why he told her he would let her know his decisions the next day and she unlocked the door and let him stay in his room that night but my uncle Ben got to thinking that it would break her heart if he told her he could not marry her or pay the room rent either so early in the morning he left with a bookmaker he knows who was going back to New York in an automobile.

I ses see here Ethel your uncle Ben is a deadbeat and a crook to run out on his room rent like that and that dame can put him in jail if she catches up with him. Ethel says yes that is what [illegible] Ben ses the first day he came over to see me so he sent her the money right away. I ses O ho. I ses I am commencing to see something and Ethel ses yes Joe it was the twenty six dollars I was savying for my summer dresses but don't get mad Joe because I am very fond of my uncle Ben.

I ses why should I get mad sweets? I ses it was your own dough and she ses I wish everybody was as gentlemanly as you Joe and as my uncle Ben was with Marie. He gave her another chance. I ses what do you mean another chance Ethel? She ses why even at the last minute when he was getting ready to leave New Orleans he ses to himself if there is hot water this morning I will marry her but there was no hot water Joe.

Yours truly
JOE TURP.

Angelus Does Things Backward —But It Seems to Work Out Well

MURIEL ANGELUS

New York, June 15 (AP).—Muriel Angelus is a petite, streamlined blonde who, since she was 12 years old, has constantly been starting for some definite destination. And invariably she went, as she is doing again today, to some place else that proved more fortunate for her career.

"I lost the first job I ever went after and then got a better one because I did lose the first one," she relates. "When I was 12 years old, having studied ballet, I went for a job in a London musical show.

"After being turned down I was walking along with tears in my eyes. A man bumped into me and knocked my dancing slippers out of my arms. Saying almost nothing he led me to another theater where Fokine, the Russian ballet master, cast me in his production of 'A Midsummer Night's Dream.'

"Once when I was playing in London I was signed to make a silent picture in Berlin although I didn't speak a word of German. I wasn't perturbed about that because I knew some of the German stars in the same picture spoke English. But, when I arrived in Berlin I was transferred to another picture on the set of which there wasn't a single person who spoke English. I had to take my direction by pantomime and improvise my own performance. It won me critical praise and also cured me of stage fright."

Returning to this country, she went to Vinton Freedley, Broadway musical show producer. Freedley had heard about her performance in the London stage production of "Balalaika." So he cabled her to sail for Broadway. On arriving here she found that Freedley had postponed his show indefinitely. She went job hunting while awaiting a ship back to London.

"Fortunately they were just casting the musical 'The Boys from Syracuse,' and I was given a part in that hit," she said. "That's where movie scouts saw me and started me for Hollywood."

In Hollywood she played opposite Ronald Colman in "The Light That Failed" and a half dozen others, including her latest role in "Down Went McGinty," in fast succeeding order.

After those she decided to fly East to change over from her musical comedy accomplishments to become a serious dramatic actress, a role in a new Broadway play having been set for her.

But, just as she arrived in New York she found a telegram summoning her back to Hollywood for another new picture. So the Broadway stage role must wait in line, a very nice line in which to wait when you consider her blue eyes and ash blonde hair.

Mrs. Darnell Defies Tradition Of How a Hollywood Mother Acts

Hollywood, June 15 (AP).—Much has been said of the typical Hollywood starlet mother—an overdressed, domineering, ambitious, pushing female who hesitates at nothing to get son or daughter a place in the screen sun.

But Margaret Darnell is none of those:

She's the sort you might meet at a neighborhood club anywhere; in fact, two years ago you might have met her at such a club in Dallas.

Hollywood has not gone to the head of her beauteous, dark-haired daughter, Linda. And one of the reasons may be that it hasn't gone to the head of Mother Darnell.

Mother of six, Margaret Darnell is a pleasant person with graying hair, done in a braid in the back. She wears simple clothes, unaffected hats, little makeup. But most paradoxical, viewed in the light of activities of other movie mothers, is the way she leaves Linda's career to the studio.

"I think they know more about movies than I do," she says.

Folks around Twentieth Century-Fox didn't see her, in fact, during Linda's first picture, "Hotel for Women." Finally, at her daughter's insistance, she stepped on the lot to watch "Daytime Wife"—partially, she admits, "because I wanted to see Tyrone Power."

Linda's busy now on the film, "Brigham Young," but the director doesn't find Mrs. Darnell underfoot. She stays in their modest home a few blocks from the studio and leaves movie-making to those who know how.

She isn't entirely happy, although critics see for her daughter one of the brightest futures in filmdom. For Hollywood is a long way from Texas, and she's separated just that far from her husband, C. R. Darnell, who is in the Dallas postoffice.

"I miss him," she says, "and so do the children. But we both feel that I belong here."

With her husband are Richard Darnell and Mrs. Evelyn Cooper, the eldest of the six. With her are another daughter, the recently married Undeen Hunter, and the two youngsters, Monte, 11 (a girl), and Calvin, jr., 10, who's "Sonny" to everyone.

Mrs. Darnell sees in Linda (whose real name is Monetta Eloyse but who's "Tweedles" to the rest of the family) something of herself.

"I always longed to go on the stage," she says, "but the chance never came. When Linda's did, though, I was as happy as she. And because I feel that way, I believe I'm better able to help her with her problems."

TODAY'S RADIO HIGHLIGHTS

By Richard L. Coe.

8:30 a. m., WJSV—Ernest T. Attwell, on the staff of the National Recreation Association as field director for the bureau of colored work since 1919, speaks on that remarkable program of Negro spirituals, "Wings Over Jordan."

11, WMAL—Mozart's magnificent final symphony, "The Jupiter," opens the program of the Music Hall of the Air, Maurice Baron directing the sinfonietta. Ella Zebranska, Latvian soprano, sings "Il est doux, il est bon" from Massenet's "Herodiade" and "Mandoline" by Debussy. Pianist Henrietta Schumann joins the orchestra for the first movement of the Grieg piano concerto in A minor. "Fete Boheme" from Massenet's "Scenes Pittoresque" closes the concert.

12 noon, WMAL—Senator Arthur Capper, that faithful Kansan of the Republican vanguard, does his duty by the Red Cross on its safety program, Listen and Live.

12:30 p. m., WJSV—"Uncle Sam on the Housing Frontier" is the final broadcast of Democracy in Action, that office of education program which has been devoted of late to public housing and the American home tradition.

1, WMAL, WJSV and WOL—Cuba's President Col. Federico Laredo Bru speaks from Havana, saluting the New York World's Fair.

1:30, WRC—The University of Chicago's Round Table had planned to tell "How Armies Fight" today, but Signor Mussolini's declaration of war has changed the subject to "Italy Marches."

2, WJSV—Nicolai Berezowsky's third symphony is heard under the baton of Howard Barlow, conducting the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony. The overture and bacchanale of Wagner's "Tannhauser" opens the concert and Chaikovski's serenade for strings is also programmed. Beginning with this concert the Barlow series will have as its commentator William Fineshriber, former manager of Carnegie Hall in New York and program annotator for C. B. S.'s "serious" music!

3, WJSV—Arch MacDonald, who seems to be cropping up all over this page, airs the Washington-Detroit baseball game.

3:30, WMAL—An all-handy, W. C. that would be, program is offered by the Chamber Music Society of Lower Basin Street. Mme. Dinah Shore, soprano, offers the composer's "Loveless Love" and the octet sings the "Beale Street Blues." The society promises this to be the most serious undertaking it has yet sponsored. N. B. to the auslanders: This is a swing program!

3:30, WRC—Thinking of going to Hawaii to get away from it all? The World Is Yours has delved into that Pacific pacific paradise and dug up some habits.

4, WOL—The Musical Steelmakers have long boasted that their Sunday afternon concerts were one part of the week when father didn't have to do a lick of work. Now, on Father's Day, the tables have been wretchedly turned and a quartet of fathers, breaks the still of our Sabbath.

5, WJSV—Sinclair Lewis, that actor man who tossed off a couple of books in his day before he got stagestruck, tries to recall something about the printed word for his appearance on Fun in Print. Others to match wits with the eruditish Dr. Sigmund Spaeth are Genevieve Taggard, the poetess, and Elissa Landi, another actor person who turns out a book every so often.

6:30, WOL—We won't attempt to give any complete listing of the war commentators today as they are so numerous, so unsettled. However, one of the better ones is Sigrid Shultz, the gal covering Berlin.

6:30, WJSV—Apparently the moral to this one is, if you ever come across a murder in a strange city, get in touch with the Travelers' Aid Society. That fine and worthy group is represented by Mrs. Muriel Frizzell, supervisor, as an armchair detective in Ellery Queen's murder tale of Persians, Ceylonese and Fiji Islanders in New York, "The Adventure of the Mysterious Travelers."

7, WOL—Thousands of delegates from all parts of the country are coming to this capital next week for the national convention of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce to consider "How can Young America Aid National Defense?" This is the theme to be discussed by the American Forum of the Air in cooperation with the Junior Chamber of Commerce. Solicitor General Francis Biddle, Robert Hinckley, chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority; Rear Admiral E. J. King, of the general board of the United States Navy; Brig. Gen. George V. Strong, chief of war plans and operations, United States Army, and Perry Pipkin, president of the Junior Chamber of Commerce. Questions are welcome from the floor and admission to the airing in the Willard Hotel is free.

7, WJSV—In the fifth century, B. C., Athens and Sparta were the England and the Germany of their day. They fought for supremacy for 27 bloody years and Athens, proud democratic and naval power, finally bowed to the military might of Sparta, leader of the anti-democratic Peloponnesian League. The Athenian Thucydides wrote of this struggle. His criticisms are discussed by Dr. Stringfellow Barr and his associates on his fourth Invitation to Learning, heard at a later hour than usual because of the baseball game.

7, WRC—This is the last time. The last time, that is, to hear Jack Benny get kicked around by that saucy gang of his. He's heading for a Hawaiian vacation and Mary Livingstone is substituting a horse collar for the traditional lei. Poor Benny, he's always taking it in the neck.

7, WMAL—A hollow sound: Deems Taylor is set to announce the 1940 winner of the Rome prize in composition, a fellowship which entitles its winner to study at the American Academy in Rome for two years. However, the unmarried man, not over 30 and a citizen of the United States, has the option of taking the fellowship here in America. Frank Black conducts Howard Hanson's "Romantic" symphony, which won the first prize awarded back in 1921.

7, WRC—Anna Neagle, the British filmite who has gone from drama to musical comedy, jokes with C. McCarthy.

7:30, WJSV—This Johnny Green limerick quiz seems to be going over. Between lines Green takes time out to play that novelty tune "Six Lessons From Madame Lazonga."

7:45, WMAL—Last Sunday in his broadcast Walter Winchell made some remarks about Representative Jacob Thorkelson which that Republican from Montana is anxious to answer. His opportunity comes just before the hour for Winchell's airing.

8, WJSV—It's college days and college nights this month. Jessica Dragonette and James Newill blend their voices in well-worn, well-loved college songs, among them "The Sweetheart of Sigma Chi" and "It's Dark on Observatory Hill." Linton Wells is doing a pretty good job of commentating on this one.

8:45, WMAL—Besides being our foremost tennis figure, Don Budge is also a colossal jitterbug chap. He joins the boys in Tommy Dorsey's band whenever he gets the chance. Or so Bill Stern discovers on his Sports Newsreel.

9:30, WJSV—Gov. Raymond E. Baldwin, Connecticut Republican, speaks from Hartford.

9:30, WRC—Solicitor General Frances Biddle adreses the Red network of N. B. C.

ARCH MACDONALD, WJSV'S master game-caller of the air whose method of describing what's going on in the ball parks even when he's not there makes him the subject of today's column, The People You Hear.

Describing Game He Isn't Attending, Just Routine for Radio's Arch McDonald

By John Coburn Turner.

"It's no trick at all, working a ball game from our booth at the park—but those wire shows really get you!" This is in some respects inaccurate, for Arch McDonald well knows that broadcasting any baseball game, seen or unseen, is a matter calling for deft technique and encyclopedic knowledge of the game—a technique of which, by a happy coincidence, Arch is a true master.

Often enough, in radio, familiar voices turn out to be attached to people who bear no glimmer of resemblance to the listener's conception of them. Deep, creamy, ambassadorial intonations habitually issue from mustachioed pipsqueaks, while giants of men sing tenor. Arch McDonald is a great comfort in this respect. No one could hear his voice for three minutes and fail to build up a picture of a very large citizen, serene, self-confident, and imperturbable save in cases of ninth-inning rallies. His painstaking attention to detail betokens careful grooming and a dapper appearance (except when the thermometer is above 90). His amiable admonitions and comments suggest that broad good humor without which a fat man is truly unconstitutional. And Arch looks exactly the way he sounds.

Washington is a good baseball town, and the confirmed anti-baseball sufferer does well to remove to the seashore, these summer days, for he will not be able to stay in town and remain long out of earshot of McDonald's all-pervading voice. Fair days when the team is in town, and foul days when the Nats are on the road, in taxis and barber shops and garages and bars, Arch's solemn "Steerike three—he's a dead bird!" or his pensive "Ducks on the pond; George, my boy, you're oh for three so far—a single would be a big help," provide a perennial background for all Washington's daytime existence.

It's those out-of-town days that offer a real challenge to the baseball announcer's ingenuity. For it is one thing to make a ball game seem real to an unseeing listener when the park is spread out at your feet, and you're munching peanuts, and the crowd noises and the crack of the bat find their way into your microphone. It's quite another to make it come alive when you have nothing more tangible to work with than cabalistic symbols coming over a cold, lifeless telegraph line.

When Arch is doing a game "off the wire" he is seated at a table in one of WJSV's studios. Beside him, facing a typewriter, sits his telegrapher. As each play proceeds, The Post's Shirley Povich, at the out-of-town ball park, describes it to his Western Union satellite, who boils it down to a sort of shorthand or code and rattles it off on his key. As the message comes in at WJSV, Arch's man knocks it off on his typewriter; Arch looks over his shoulder, interprets the code, and put it on the air.

Simple enough, you may say, credulously and obligingly. Not at all, is the answer. There are complications. In the first place, Arch is of necessity at least one play behind the game, all the way through. Quite often the listener will hear the McDonald voice taking up the narrative at the precise instant when the telegraph key and the typewriter start stuttering and clicking. If the listener understands Morse code, he is a jump ahead of McDonald.

This is all very well, providing the plays don't come in too quick succession, or the wire connection isn't interrupted (necessitating ad libbing on a grand scale!), or a station break, a news flash, or a commercial doesn't intervene. Consider, when next you listen in, that however much you hear of Wheaties, of that Pure Ivory, or of Columbia's 50,000-watt station for the Nation's Capital, nary a play does Arch gloss over—or omit—or squeeze in edgeways.

Then, too, all the color and most of the background must be supplied by Arch through intuition and a certain amount of shrewd guessing. When he says "One and one on the batter. Here's the windup . . . the pitch . . . and it's low and inside for a ball," he has had only "B2L" to work from.

One of the hardest problems, according to Arch, presents itself when, for example, the commentary has been sidetracked in favor of the Breakfast of Champions for 30 or 40 important seconds. Arch is two plays behind the game, and is cheerfully announcing "The tying run is on second. One out and Travis at bat. C'mon, Cece this is the moment." He has meanwhile read over his telegrapher's shoulder that Cece, after two strikes, has hit squarely into a fine double play, and all bets are off. For a devout Nationals fan this is a sad enough consummation quite, without the added painful necessity of maintaing an air of hopeful expectancy in the full knowledge that the worst has already happened.

An afternoon at the ball park merely whets the McDonald appetite and provides stimulation for the rigors of the tough McDonald schedule of evening programs. A Sunday afternoon off the air provides a happy interlude—for a baseball game with no responsibilities. But a "wire show" and Arch is ready to fall into bed.

Hearing Ahead—Notes on Programs

MONDAY: 10:45 a. m., WOL—Domestic drammer, morning heat, gets some relief in the form of the return to the Mutual network of Jimmy Scribner, that chap of 22 or so voices whose exploits are those of the Johnson Family. This is Jimmy's first morning date and of the five weekly airings, the Monday-Wednesday-Friday groups will be thrown to Europe and South America. 11:30, WMAL—Delegates to the fourteenth annual National 4-H Camp in this Capital participate in the National Farm and Home Hour. Club leaders and executives of the Department of Agriculture ask "What's Ahead for Rural Youth?" 6:15 p. m., WMAL—Another program with youth as its feature, Youth Tells Its Story, asks "What Use Schooling?" 8, WJSV—William Powell and Myrna Loy play Nick and Nora in their recent film play, "After the Thin Man," for C. De Mille. 8:30, WRC—Collegiate! Alec Templeton has adapted Ethelbert Nevins' "Narcissus" into the collegiate fight song metier.

TUESDAY: 5:15 p. m., WJSV—While this is not definitely listed for local consumption as yet, at this hour Ted Husing will be somewhere along the Hudson telling the C. B. S. listeners about the annual Poughkeepsie Intercollegiate Regatta. 7, WJSV—Uncle Jim's Question Bee, which rumors itself as being the oldest quiz program on the air and on vacation since December, returns to take the spot held by Edward G. Robinson's Big Town. 7:30, WMAL—Where he's going to get the time to do it we don't know, but Ralph Ingersoll, publisher of the new PM, is taking time out on its first day to truck with those Information Please people. 8, WMAL—Cornelia Otis Skinner plays Susan B. Anthony for the Cavalcade of America series. 8, WRC—At the New York World's Fair, the Bordens exhibit of luxurious cows and the American Express motorcarts are much in the limelight. Their respective personnels get together for a Battle of the Sexes. 10, WOL—Col. Louis A. Johnson, Assistant Secretary of War, addresses the Institute of Food Technologists in Chicago on "Mobilization of the Food Industry in the Event of War."

WEDNESDAY: 12 noon, WRC—Jacques Abram, the youthful American pianist who is offering a series of piano music from Scarlatti to Beethoven, plays the Bach "English" Suite in D minor. 8, WJSV—Raymond Massey and Ruth Gordon, who co-starred on the stage in Edith Wharton's striking novel, "Ethan Frome," join Pauline Lord in an adaptation of the Owen and Donald Davis play. 8, WRC—This is very likely a come-on, but they say that Fred Allen and Jack Benny are finally going to have it out. 8:30, WOL—Former Vice President Charles G. Dawes talks on war, the Government and business from Chicago.

THURSDAY: 7, WMAL—Winifred Heidt, mezzo-soprano, and Gordon Gifford, barytone, both of whom have received recognition from the Metropolitan Opera Auditions of the Air, are co-soloists on Musical Americana with Raymond Paige's Orchestra. 8:30, WRC—Now Rudy Vallee is looking for Ponce de Leon and we wish he hadn't brought up the idea of getting old. Cobina Wright, jr., is the prize and Walter O'Keefe hovers in the spring shade. 9, WRC—Kirsten Flagstad, the celebrated soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, and Roland Young, that quizzical chap of the films, share the honors on the Bing Crosby variety hour. 9, WMAL—Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis again meets Chile's challenger, Arturo Godoy, in the Yankee Stadium. 9:15, WJSV—Representative Emanuel Celler, Democrat, New York, and Economics Prof. Dan E. Casey, of Georgetown University, discuss "The Sane Way of Financing Defense."

FRIDAY: 1:30 p. m., WMAL—Vladimir Brenner, N. B. C. pianist, joins barytone Conrad Thibault with the N. B. C. Concert Orchestra, offering music from Handel, De Koven, Grieg, Delius and Edward German. 7, WRC—Lucille Manners has picked a tough one for her high light offering this week. It's the "Voi che Sapete" aria from Mozart's "The Magic Flute." 9, WJSV—Thomas E. Dewey, still in the lead for the Republican nomination from the looks of things, addresses a party rally in upstate New York.

SATURDAY: 1 p. m., WRC—Dr. Albert Einstein, a resident of the United States since 1933 and chiefly known by the layman for something that man in the street cannot understand, does understand how he feels to be an American. 6, WJSV—That talkative People's Platform goes into the possible Republican Presidential nominees. 8, WJSV—Wee Bonnie Baker headlines at the Capitol for the new week and with Orrin Tucker airs from Washington for their popular Saturday Hit Parade.

Grace Moore

The Noted Songbird Returns From France to Surprise a Good Many Newspapermen With Her Gracious Manner

By Jack Sher.

In 1927, Grace Moore flounced out of Hollywood, all furied up about the way the movie gentry were handling serious music in films. She was thoroughly fed up with making "One Night of Love" over and over under a variety of titles. With La Moore's exit, the last echo of an aria faded from the sound stages. Opera hasn't been mentioned, in Hollywood since—except, maybe, when it was coupled with horses.

The usually gay and charming Miss Moore came to New York in a very unpleasant frame of mind. It became no secret to the habitues of night clubs that she was not a person to engage in close-range conversation. The newspaper Neds, your reporter included, were also given quite a badgering and bouncing around by Miss Moore.

But it is now 1940, and many things have changed for the better and the worse. It is pleasant to report that Grace Moore has had such a change in temperament that we are almost ready to drag out that adjective "sweet" and polish it up for her. This metamorphosis in Moore ought not to be dismissed without giving due credit to the French. For it is a group of movie-making Frenchmen who restored her faith in the human being by proving to all the world that pure, unadulterated opera can be successfully captured by the camera. Miss Moore and these Frenchmen have teamed up and turned out a movie opera named "Louise."

In her apartment (super sumptuous) on Park avenue, Miss Moore explained to me that in making "Louise" she fulfilled a lifelong ambition. She also hinted subtly that the success of this film gives Hollywood what is known in the opera as "the bird."

"Way back in 1930 I tried to get M-G-M and then Columbia to make 'Louise,'" Miss Moore said, smiling slyly. "But they wouldn't listen to me. Now, of course, I'm glad the picture was made in France, because it proves what can be done by intelligent men working with very little money."

"How much?" I asked.

"The entire picture, my own salary included, cost less than $250,000," Miss Moore said. "Only one camera and two lights were used. Imagine Hollywood trying to shoot a picture with one camera! They always used four or five on every one of my pictures. And, oh, how they use lights in Hollywood. All that over-lighting always made me look like a washed-out blonde."

Miss Moore sat up erect, brushed her flowing blond hair back from her face and opened her blue eyes wide. She looked anything but a washed-out blonde, and I ventured to remark that Hollywood was always great for overdoing things, particularly with lights. Then, we both fell to agreeing that Hollywood could learn a great deal about making pictures from the French. Miss Moore had much to say about the way the French conducted themselves on a set.

"Unlike Hollywood," she said, there's no nerve-racking confusion. We never started work until noon. At 4 or 5 in the afternoon we would quit for a leisurely cup of tea. After this relaxation, we would work until around 8 in the evening. And then the entire company would go in search of an interesting place to eat."

Miss Moore explained that she was writing a book for gourmets and that everyone considered these epicurean excursions as important as making the picture. "Everyone," she laughed, "from the electricians to the director, saw to it that I had at least one meal in their favorite restaurant. I'm calling the book 'I Sing for My Supper' and it will probably be dedicated to the 'Louise' company."

Miss Moore went back to the picture. "I had so much fun making it," she said, "and everyone was so easy-going that I didn't realize until it was over that we made record time in shooting it. It was done in less than three months. Only once did we approach anything like the confusion on a Hollywood set." She smiled. "And, at that, it took a war scare to throw us off our stride.

"We were shooting at the Joinville Studios, on the outskirts of Paris, when it happened. Hitler had just made his ultimatum to France and the people were becoming hysterical. The contagion spread to the set. Some of us took to weeping. My husband, Valentin Parera, proved himself a hero. He was the only calm person there. Finally he quieted everyone down. We thought we weren't going to be able to finish the picture."

At this exciting point in the interview, Miss Moore was interrupted by a girl who came in to have an ad okayed. I relaxed while Miss Moore and the girl, who had a drippy Southern accent, went over the ad copy.

"I don't like my eyes in this picture," Miss Moore said.

"Yes, have them fix the eyes," Miss Moore said. Then she smiled at me. "My eyes are never half closed like that. Why, they're wide open, even when I'm sleeping," she laughed.

The girl went out with the copy.

"Now, where were we?" Miss Moore began. "Oh, yes. So, we finished the picture. It had a gala opening at the Paramount Theater in Paris. That was just 10 days before the war broke out. I didn't see the picture until two days before I sailed for home. I almost didn't see it then," she smiled, "I had to pick my way through the streets with the aid of a flashlight. Paris was blacked out, you know. When I got to the theater, about 300 people were standing in line. Most of them had flashlights, too, and many of them were carrying their dinners of bread and cheese and wine because the war scare had closed most of the restaurants."

The picture, Miss Moore told me, has since played to capacity audiences in Canada and Cuba, as well as in France and America. She was lavish in her praise of Abel Gance, the director of the film, and Gustave Charpentier, who not only composed the original opera but adapted it for the film as well. Mr. Charpentier had to cut the three-hour opera to 74 minutes for the movie. "And," she said with a smile, "it has lost none of its original charm in the cutting."

She should know, for she has sung the original score both here and in France. She and Mary Garden are the only American singers who have ever sung the opera in the land of its birth.

Miss Moore plans to go back to France to make another picture, as soon as the war is over. Right now, she is keeping a sharp eye on Hollywood to see what effect the success of "Louise" will have on the boys in the industry who thought operatic films were through.

"Here, in America, one of the few places in the world where there is freedom of expression, we should have a renaissance in music," Miss Moore maintains. "It is the duty of those in the entertainment world to help bring about this renaissance by giving the people the best we have in music. And what better medium is there than the movies? Hollywood is always boasting about its technical advancement. Well, this is certainly one place in which it could be put to splendid use."

As for Grace Moore's own contribution to the renaissance of music—she has just started a school to help young singers seeking an operatic training and career. It is called the Grace Moore School of Singing. Winter classes are held in New York, summer classes in Newtown, Conn., right next door to Miss Moore's summer home.

Pupils of the school are given a cultural as well as a musical education. They are shuttled to art galleries and plays. They attend rehearsals at the Metropolitan. They are coached in dramatics and languages. They are even given a smattering of training in how to win friends among influential people—an art which has never hindered the artist.

With her school, her concert tours, radio stints and performances at the Metropolitan, Grace Moore is now leading a strenuously active life. Before I left her apartment, Miss Moore had to rush out to give a talk on music before a group of women at a luncheon.

All this activity—and the French influence—has had a wonderful effect on Miss Moore. And we hope it lasts forever. But, right now, Miss Moore's sweetness and light may depend on the Governor of Connecticut.

It seems the Governor called on Miss Moore a few months ago to ask her to make some records, to help promote "public safety" in song. Miss Moore's reply was, "I will, provided you send some men up to repair the road just below my house. That road is also a menace to public safety." The Governor said he would do what he could, so Miss Moore made the records.

The road is still unrepaired. Last week, Miss Moore sent this note to the Governor: "I took the high road, now you take the low road."

I hope the Governor can get some men up there in a hurry, in order to preserve the public safety of drivers in Connecticut, night club addicts in New York and newspapermen all over the place.

Grace Moore's Tips to Young Singers

1—Choose your teacher carefully. Judge the value of your lessons and teacher by whether you are learning to sing easily and nautrally.
2—Take as many lessons a week as possible, so that most of your practice is supervised by your teacher.
3—Beginners should never over-practice. Never practice until your voice is tired or strained.
4—Avoid forcing your voice, either in tone or range.
5—Physical fitness is very important. Avoid excesses of all kinds. Do not drink or smoke.
6—It is very useful for singers to play some musical instrument and to have at least an elementary knowledge of harmony.
7—Listen to other singers, good and bad; learn to distinguish between them and to understand clearly exactly what they do in the matter of musicianship and the use of vocal technique.
8—Develop your imagination by an intelligent study of the techniques of all the arts in order to be able to bring out the greatest possibilities of your own interpretive ability.
9—Choose songs for study not for their spectacular value, but for their muscial worth and singable qualities. There is a huge library of very fine and very little known vocal music by great composers which has far more value to singers than much of the better known and, unfortunately, hackneyed music.
10—Most important of all—be patient and serious. You must have faith in yourself and devote yourself completely to your work. You will have to make sacrifices and face obstacles, which would be unbearable unless you believe in yourself.

GRACE MOORE

In Local Music Circles

John Henry Marville, of the Hamline School of Music, will present a group of his pupils in Hamline Methodist Church at 8:15 p. m. Saturday. The following are participating: Marta Brokaw, Joseph Brooks, Robert A. Brown, Jane Busby, George Irving Chandler, Virginia Gary, William Hennage, Dorothy Kay, Thomas N. Leef, Ernest Livingston, Jane MacPherson, Anna Katherine Molster, Frank and Margaret Myers, John Murphy, Fanchion Rawlett, Hallie Mae Reed, Edith M. Rice, Viola Sanders, Annabel Spangle, Olive Stockdill, William Strauss and Jane Winkelhaus.

* * * * *

Sylvia Kaplovitz, of the Homer L. Kitt School of Music, will present Gertrude Betts, accordionist and pianist, in recital at 4 o'clock this afternoon. Miss Betts will be assisted by the professional Kitt Accordionettes, composed of Antoinette Charahus, Leona Marans, Gertrude Betts, Harriet Okun, Shirley Gold, Elizabeth Bickford, Ruth Buchanan and Iris Grassel. Mrs. Kaplovitz will also present for the first time the Washington Debs, who have signed a contract for the summer at Atlantic City. This group comprises the Misses Marans, Charahus, Betts, Okun and Gold, and Verona Fulton, Dorothy Williams and Pauline Blundon.

* * * * *

The Emery Studios will present the fifth recital of the June series at 4 o'clock this afternoon in the Washington Music Center. Jeanne Rose, pianist, will play works by Beethoven, Chopin, Debussy, Palmgren and Ibert. The guest will be Rial Rose, basso, who will sing "O Ruddier Than the Cherry" from Handel's "Acis and Galatea" and a group of lyrics.

* * * * *

The closing recital by pupils of the Etta Schmid Wells School of Music will be given Thursday night at 8 o'clock in Cleveland Park Congregational Church, Thirty-fourth and Lowell streets. Individual recitals were presented five evenings last week in the studios of the Esmu Club. On Tuesday afternoon Marjory Morrison Smith, assistant to Mrs. Wells, presented her pupils from the Maret School, and a Wednesday afternoon recital was given by pupils of Eunice Wilson Greene, assistant at the Michigan Park studio.

* * * *

Pupils of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Potter will be heard in recital on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in Calvary Methodist Church. Pianists appearing are Mildred Vanderbeek, Dorothy Ann Washington, Hope Hutson, Charles Conrard, Peggy Stockett, Barbara Sweet, Elizabeth Meininger, Eunice Murray and Joan Robinson (pupil of Sally West). Others on the program are Elizabeth Meininger, Hugh Dryden and Dale Cornor, organists; Mary Long, soprano; Stanley Cheston, tenor; Merle Gates, tenor, and J. L. Stinson, barytone. Louis Potter, jr., will present Georgiana Benjamin and Frederick Bullock, violoncello students, and William Taylor, clarinet student.

* * * *

The annual meeting of the D. C. Federation of Music Clubs will be held at 1736 Connecticut avenue on Wednesday evening, when officers will be elected to serve for two years. All members, including presidents, directors and counselors of clubs and choirs, are urged to attend. Eva Whitford Lovette is the retiring president, having served for two consecutive terms.

* * * *

Elsa Koppel will present some of her vocal students in a studio recital Thursday night at 8 o'clock. The prticipants are Harold Lee, Hannah Carpenter, Thelma Johnson, Eleanor Morrison, Louis Dreeben, Beatrice Silverman, Marion Weinstein and Phyllis Schwartz.

Orphans in Love"

by Marion White

Ellen Carlan has secretly loved Peter Storm since both were children in an orphanage. After Peter becomes a public hero in a tenement fire, John Abbott, prominent attorney makes a place for Peter in his office. Peter thinks Abbott's daughter, Millicent, is the most attractive girl he has ever seen, and Mr. and Mrs. Abbott decide if Peter married Millicent, they could return to Peter without publicity his property which they had administered since Jonathan Tucker died, without known heir. Ellen has been promoted from a clothes model to a dress designer. She and Peter return to the orphanage for Christmas, and later go to the old Tucker house, which Peter has had cleaned and decorated. Ellen finds a letter from Paris dated 1913 in a Bible, and thrusts it in her pocket when Millicent unexpectedly appears. Ellen goes to the orphanage and reads the letter which reveals Jonathan Tucker's only heir, a grandson who was killed en route home from Europe, left a two-weeks old son. Ellen believes John Abbott knows where he is. Meanwhile, Millicent announces to the Abbotts her engagement to Peter. Peter sees the real Millicent when he accidentally tears her formal gown. Comparing her with Ellen, he appreciates Ellen's fine qualities. Ellen sees the announcement of the engagement and since Peter is to be Abbott's son-in-law, she destroys the letter concerning the Tucker heir. Kenneth Hall, with whom Millicent formerly was infatuated, asks her to forget her engagement to Peter and marry him. John Abbott suffers a heart attack and is brought home unconscious.

Cora sat up expectantly in the chair. She looked about the room, accepting the observation. Everything was the same.

Even the air was the same, for the curtains hung limp at the half-open windows, not swayed by any vagrant breeze. Yet she sensed a change. She felt an intangible, indefinite exaltation. It warmed her heart and stirred her blood with new hope.

She leaned closer to her husband. Surely he would feel this new spiritual promise which had answered her prayers. She clasped his hand again.

"John! John, dear!"

She watched his still face, until her eyelids burned with the intensity of her staring and the background of the room faded into obscure shadows. Seconds passed so slowly that it seemed as if all the world had stopped, as if all past and future was merged into the infinite significance of this moment.

At last she saw the eyelids quiver. It was an almost imperceptible motion, but it caused her heart to leap. She pressed his hand with a fierce energy.

"John! Speak to me!"

His eyes opened.

He turned his head the barest fraction of an inch toward her. His lips twitched pathetically. They formed her name, though the sound which emerged was scarcely the breath of a whisper.

"Oh, my dear! My dear! You are all right!"

Tears streamed down her cheeks in a tremendous release of anxiety. She bent down, pressing her face into his hand, and drying them on his chilled, withered flesh.

Several moments passed before he could summon the strength to speak, and then his voice came in a hoarse, unnatural whisper.

On the Brink

"I'm on . . . the brink . . . Cora." He halted between the words to wait for breath.

"No, John! You're better. The doctor said so. You must only rest a while."

He closed his eyes. "I'll rest . . . better . . . when everything . . . is right again. I have no peace . . . no peace . . ."

She knew instantly what weighted his mind, the worry that the doctor had intimated. "Everything is all right, John. Have you forgotten? Millicent and Peter will marry. You can straighten out everything then."

He shook his head, slowly at first, then with jerking insistence, as if he were struggling against some unseen force. "No time . . . no time . . ." His voice rose to a moaning, sibilant cry. "I want to see . . . them . . . married. Now, now, Cora . . . you hear? Now, here at my bedside . . . before it is too late."

The exhausting pressure of work continued at Rosalind's. There were moments when it seemed that every girl in New York of marriageable age was on her way to the altar.

The workshop behind the salon was a gigantic wardrobe of wedding gowns and bridal veils—of white satin and old lace, of misty tulle and shimmering brocades, of all the materials into which the dreams of youth are woven.

Ellen worked doggedly. This was her dream come true. This was the creation and achievement and recognition. But it was served in a cup of bitterness.

Each beautiful dinner dress which she turned out was but another replica of the dress which Millicent would wear that night for Peter, each ethereal wedding dress but another stinging reminder of their forthcoming marriage.

This afternoon, working alone in one of the fitting rooms, she fought a weary battle with herself.

Outside the sewing machines whirred industriously, a toneless accompaniment to Mamie Doyle's equally toneless singing; yet the combined discord was not strong enough to drown out the constant click of scissors and the spasmodic thrump of the pressing iron.

Nor could all these sounds, put together with the hum of Fifty-seventh street traffic, the constant shouts of taxi drivers and the angry honks of their horns, and the noise of drillers at work ripping up a section of the asphalt, blot out the insistent questions and quotations and arguments within her own mind.

Tonight, perhaps for the last time, she would have dinner with Roger Maillard. Twice he had asked her to marry him.

He had offered the seclusion of his vast ranch in the Rockies. He had shown her pictures of its sloping hill and tranquil pastures, of the rambling white house with the wide veranda which faced the west, where they could sit in the evening and watch the golden sun sink behind the mountains.

He demanded little. He loved her very much; even if she were not sure of her own feelings, she would come to care for him in the same way once they were beyond the confusion and uncertainty of the city.

Proved Herself

"You've proved yourself," he had said the last time they were together. "You've found success. Tell me, Ellen, is it so tremendously gratifying as you believed it would be?"

She could not reply to this. She could never explain unless she went straight to the beginning to point out that her disappointment had nothing whatever to do with the work itself.

She could explain nothing, unless she told him about Peter. So far she had not done so. Tonight, perhaps, she would.

Or perhaps she would make up her mind to forget Peter once and for always, to go away with Roger and find a new life of contentment in the shadows of the mountains.

What else was there for her to do? Nothing could alter the fact that Peter was lost to her.

Would she go on here at Rosalind's until she was an irritable, bitter old woman, hating herself and hating every piece of work for the memories it awakened within her?

Or would she marry Roger, and learn to love him not as she had loved Peter, as a throbbing, burning component of her own self, but as a friend, with whom each passing year would bring her in closer understanding?

"I can't decide," she thought. "I can't make my choice, as if it were choosing between apple pie or chocolate cake for dessert."

She wished for a sign, for some startling, unmistakable revelation which could point the way for her, so that, the decision made, she could only go forward, following the prescribed course with the best possible grace.

She lingered over her work, as if her own slowing down might check the passage of time. There was no postponing the decision. Roger was leaving the city tomorrow. Whether he went alone or not depended upon her.

It was quarter to six before she finally walked across the sidewalk to meet him. He came forward eagerly. "Did you have to lock up?" he teased.

"I'm sorry I'm so late," she said penitently.

"You should be! Seems to me I've been waiting here for half my life." His voice was bright with expectation.

"I couldn't finish the last details. My hands were all thumbs." That was true enough. Her hands trembled so that she had left Miss Arlen's dress unfinished; she couldn't trust herself with scissors.

And when she tried to rearrange her hair, combing out the curls, they stuck to the cold, clammy surface of her fingers.

Dine at Club

They dined quietly at his club. It was the first time he had taken her there, to parade her before the curious stares of those who had known him ever since he was a boy.

It was a significant gesture, as if he would proclaim to these favored intimates that this girl was important to him. Ellen did not guess that she was the only girl beside his sister whom he had ever brought here.

While they ate, he talked at random, lightly and easily, stifling the question that was in his eyes.

He told her once more of the ranch: he painted it in brighter and more glowing colors, as if he were a salesman determined to put this deal across. He spoke of his family, of his sister, of his Cousin Bruce, of his Great-Aunt Caroline, whom "you'll love to meet, one of these days, Ellen."

And his talk frightened her because it took so much more for granted than she was ready to accede.

She still sought about in her mind, like a silly child or a superstitious old woman, for the sign which would tell her what to do.

At last they left the club, and walked down the side street to where the car was parked. He took her arm, held her very close. "Where to now, darling?" he asked her. "I want my answer, but not in front of a red light."

His voice was possessive; instead of reassuring her, it made her more nervous. She trembled, and thought there was a chill in the air, or else it was the quick change from the warm dining room to the street. She felt strangely alone.

Hesitates

"I don't know, Roger. Wherever you want to go . . ." Why don't I give him his answer, she thought. Why don't I tell him that I'll go with him, that we'll be very, very happy together?

"O. K." He got into the car beside her, started up the motor. "We'll drive over to Long Island. I'll show you the old homestead . . ."

He turned east, headed north on Park avenue toward Queensboro Bridge. Traffic was heavy; it claimed his constant attention, and Ellen was left to her thoughts.

She remembered that night he had waited for her at the shop, sitting outside in the corridor reading detective stories while she worked.

He is so good to me, she told herself squarely. So kind and thoughtful and gentle. Of course I love him. How can you help loving a person who is always good to you? Once we were married . . .

Beyond that she could not think. She could imagine being on the ranch with him, she could picture him teaching her to ride, on a little pony first, then on a fine, frisking horse.

She would fall off, perhaps a dozen times. Each time he would pick her up and laugh and urge her to try again. His men would be there, the boisterous, good-natured cowboys: They would sing tragic ballads of the plains around open campfires at night.

And Mrs. Hardy, the plump old housekeeper he spoke about, would take her to her heart and they would be happy, day after day. It would be a glorious, delightful vacation.

A vacation. But marriage is more than that. Marriage is living together, day in and day out. Year in and year out. How could she stand up beside Roger, promise to take him until death do us part?

Suppose next month or next year or the year after that, Peter should come to her. What then? How could she stay with Roger, forever and ever?

Of course, Peter would never come. He would have made those same promises to Millicent. He would be happy with her. For always. Would he? She thought of Millicent's hard, selfish eyes, and she wondered.

They drove out along the boulevard and turned off on the parkway. On their left she could see the trylon and perisphere of the World's Fair silhouetted against the sky, black against the gray of night.

The converging roads to and from the fairgrounds wound in and out like a gigantic pretzel speckled with electric lights instead of caraway seeds.

Soon, possibly 20 minutes later, they turned off on one of the side roads, drove around and under the parkway, and then north.

"This is the road to Roslyn," he told her. "Two miles farther on is our place." The side road was dark and untraveled, but he drove fast, as if every foot of the way was familiar.

They came to a narrow driveway, almost hidden by the trees. In the darkness it seemed little more than a dirt road. "This is the back door," he said lightly. "Save 2 miles."

He drove more slowly, trying to keep the wheels in the frozen ruts. Tall trees bordered the lane on both sides; their branches met in an arch overhead.

Ellen's loneliness grew to a chilling dread she could not explain. The darkness was intense.

Suddenly Roger brought the car to a stop; he reached down slowly and pulled up the hand brake.

"There's the house." He pointed through a clearing in the trees ahead of them. Ellen peered through the gloom; for a few minutes she could barely make out the dark outline.

When she finally did see the house, its enormity oppressed her. It was dark, probably brick or fieldstone, and ancient Tudor towers jutted into the night. It seemed more like an old feudal castle than a home.

"We closed it up," he explained, "immediately after Ruth's wedding. Just the caretaker lives here now, but his place is down the road a bit. However . . ." He lowered his voice and his arms stole over the back of the seat. "We didn't come here to talk about houses, did we Ellen?"

She felt very small and uncertain. This is how it will be when we're married, she thought. Just the two of us, all alone in a world of our own. In a world darker and deeper than this one.

We'll be buried in a valley between the mountains, and late at night, when everything else is quiet, it will be like this. Just like this. But I'll be more lonely and more frightened . . .

Then, quite suddenly, she knew. She didn't love Roger. She couldn't marry him. Even if it meant going on to the end of her days, alone and forgotten, it would be better than to be forever with someone you did not love, with your heart crying out in desperation for that other one.

"You're coming with me tomorrow, Ellen." He stated it as a fact rather than a question, but his voice pleaded. "I love you so much, my dear. So very much . . ."

Her eyes filled with tears, and she was ashamed, now, that she had brought him this far in his hope. Her throat throbbed with a dull ache.

"Roger . . ."

His arms were about her; he drew her closer. "You do love me, Ellen. You must!"

Confesses

"No, Roger. Oh, my dear, I'm so sorry . . . I couldn't be sure—believe me. Not until this moment. You see, there's someone else . . . I can't forget."

He released her abruptly. "Someone else?" His voice was a hoarse whisper.

"There's always been someone else. All my life. I should have told you . . ."

"But where is he? What's the matter?"

She could not lie, not even to save her pride. "He's going to marry another girl."

"And leave you, Ellen? Oh, the fool! You can't have any feeling for him now. You can't love him—not after——"

"That's what I thought, too. But I do, Roger. It's something I can't help. I can't turn it off, like a cold-water faucet."

He slumped back behind the wheel, stared dully ahead into the darkness. "You'll have to, won't you? You'll have to forget. Not right away, perhaps. But next year. The year after. You're young, Ellen. Time changes everything." He seemed to be talking to himself, holding out this last hope.

She did not answer. She offered no word of encouragement. He's been so good to me, she thought miserably. Why did I have to let it go this far?

Laughs Shortly

When he realized that there was nothing more to be said, he started the engine, reached down to release the brake.

"I'm sorry I've been such a fool," she said then. "Will you forgive me, Roger?"

He laughed shortly. "There's nothing to forgive, my dear. Things just happen like this, I guess." He started down the lane, turned the car about with expert maneuvering and headed back toward the main road.

"I'm going back to the ranch tomorrow," he told her presently. "But I'll be back one of these days. I'll be back, Ellen."

They found little to talk about on the drive back to the city. When I'm an old, old woman, Ellen thought foolishly, I'll be sorry. I'll have no one, no one at all, and I'll read in the papers about Mr. Roger Maillard, and I'll remember this night.

Cross Bridge

They crossed the bridge once more, became entangled in the great mass of city traffic. Slowly they made their way uptown. They stopped at last in front of the residence club.

Roger made no move to get out immediately. He pulled on the brake, but did not turn off the motor.

"I'm never going to forget you, Ellen. This has been the real thing. You know that?"

"I do, Roger. That's what makes it so hard. And I am so terribly, terribly fond of you. I wish I could make you sure of that."

He leaned toward her. "Give me one last memory to take with me."

He drew her close to him, kissed her long and hungrily. She did not resist: it was little enough to give.

When he released her at last, her hand was on the door of the car. "Don't get out, Roger. Don't let us say good-by. And thank you . . . for so many things."

He opened the door for her, and she ran quickly across the sidewalk. There was a sob in her throat and her eyes were damp. She hoped she would not see Miss Evans.

She did not know, as she hastened up the steps, that directly across the street, hidden in the shadow of the building, his heavy coat bundled up around his ears to keep out the wind, Peter waited and watched for her.

Solution of Last Week's Puzzle.

D. C. Artists Show at Art Gallery

ART

Whyte to Offer Reserve Supply To Encourage Sales

By Alice Graeme.

An important part of the policy of the newly reorganized Whyte Gallery will be to sponsor the works of Washington artists. The gallery plans not only to exhibit the work of local painters but to keep on hand examples of their water colors, drawings and prints. It is the hope of the gallery to familiarize the Washington public with the works of painters from this region and thus to encourage both new and more experienced collectors to buy from local artists.

Opening tomorrow, the Whyte Gallery will present a new showing of the work of Washington painters. This display is to continue throughout the summer, with certain changes during that time as sales are made. To emphasize the local aspect of the exhibition, even the subject of the pictures has been limited to "The Washington Scene"—that is paintings of landscapes in and around Washington. Prices of the pictures have been kept moderate—water colors, gouaches and pastels are under $50, and all prints are for sale at less than $15. No oils are included in the present showing. The gallery, which is a part of the Whyte Bookshop, is already equipped with low book shelves and offers ample opportunity for the inspection of both pictures and books.

Local Artists Sent Invitations

In arranging for the present exhibition, Mr. James Whyte sent invitations to many painters in this region. The artists were asked to submit pictures of Washington subjects which might be used in the summer showing. Many responded, and the pictures of such well known painters as Nicolai Cikovsky, Alice Acheson, Prentiss Taylor and others are included in the Whyte showing. Yet a number of names which should appear in any representative Washington exhibition are not present. This effort of the Whyte Gallery to provide a sales room for artists' wares is an effort in the right direction, but to succeed it must have the cooperation of the best artists in the District. The limitation of the subject matter, and the short time in which the exhibition had to be organized may account for the failure of some artists to joint the group. The Washington scene as a subject necessarily excludes still life, abstraction, portrait and most figure compositions. For this reason many artists found their work disqualified for this particular showing, and perhaps had not sufficient time to prepare new work. As the season advances, however, more painters will no doubt be added to the list. A sales room for local pictures can fill a real need in this city, but it must make certain to present the best available work and to maintain definite standards of quality.

Nyquist Subject Has Interest

Among the most interesting of the water colors in the present group are the papers by Carl Nyquist. The well organized composition of his "Viaduct" has been achieved with a very dry brush, leaving areas of the paper white and untouched. A rather commonplace subject here has been dignified by able handling. Hugh Collins, who is now working on the District WPA project, has contributed his water color, "Fire Boat." Mr. Collins' work has greatly matured in the past few years, and his freshly handled papers are an addition to this showing.

Alice Acheson has introduced an innovation in her work by using gouache for her "Georgetown Corner." She is not yet, however, as much at home in this medium as in water color. Her "Skipping Rope," placed in the widow of the exhibition, is technically more interesting, and is, in fact, one of her most successful papers. Nicolai Cikovsky, an artist capable of distinguished work, shows the still uneven quality of his output in the several water colors and drawings which represent his work in this show. "Roosevelt Island," a slight but agreeable subject, is the best.

Circus Theme Ably Handled

Of Paul Arlt's several papers his "Ringling Circus Comes to Washington" has most life and vitality. The introduction of several figures adds considerable interest, and shows Mr. Arlt's increasing ability in this medium. In his "Treasury Building, South Entrance" he has experimented with a form of expression which strongly suggests the decorative patterns of Raoul Dufy.

Hugo Inden's neat little ink drawings with water color wash show the clear cut precision of the illustrator; Julia Eckel's "Observatory Hill" demonstrates the effective use of pastel on black paper; several gouache by Herman Maril are characteristic of this Baltimorian's well known work; the wash drawing by Bayard Underwood has interest, and John J. Greer's "Hofer Town House" has something of the modern primitive's careful regard for detail.

Among the prints, Marguerite Burgess has several which show originality, and there is other work in black and white by John C. Rogers, Howard Swenson, Marguerite Kumm and Alice Acheson.

Club to Hear Gounod's 'Mireille'

Condensed Version To Be Given Tuesday In Arts Garden

Under the direction of Florence Howard, the Tuesday Evening Music Club will give a condensed version of Gounod's "Mireille" on the evening of June 25 in the garden of the Arts Club. Mrs. Howard heard the opera in Paris last summer, and was so charmed by its melodious and engaging music that she determined to present portions of it here.

Based on "Mireio," the Provencal narrative poem by Frederic Mistral, "Mireille" had its premiere March 19, 1864, in the Theatre Lyrique, Paris. Reduced from five acts to four, it was brought out again at the Opera Comique, November 10, 1874, and enjoyed only a moderate success. Revived October 29, 1889, it received merited recognition and proved so popular that 226 performances were wiven by the end of 1894. It is still in the repertoire of the Opera Comique.

The program by the club will also include selections from Smetana's "Prodana Nevesta," Gluck's "Iphigenie en Aulide" and Donizetti's "La Favorita." The soloists are Frances Tucker, Margaret Warthen, Grace Holmes, Selma Last, Ina Holtzscheiter, Helen Parry, Eleanor Catron, Elma Dotter, Myrtle Barnes and Eleanor Brall. Tatiana Gnuchev and her corps de ballet, Alden Emery, flautist, and Marjorie G. Davis, pianist, are the assisting artists.

Dr. Doris Cochran Exhibits Work At City Club

A group of landscape and portrait still life studies in water color, oil, pencil and charcoal, the work of Dr. Doris M. Cochran, is now on exhibition at the Women's City Club, 736 Jackson place northwest. Crocheted panels by Dr. Cochran will also be shown.

Dr. Cochran, a scientist by profession, has devoted much of her time to art, and this exhibit marks the first extensive display of her work in Washington. Educated as a biologist, and at present an assistant curator in the division of Reptiles and Betrachians, United States National Museum, Dr. Cochran has nevertheless found time to take extensive art courses at Corcoran.

Art Federation To Meet on Coast

San Francisco will be the scene of the first Far Western meeting of the American Federation of Art, July 11 through 13. The convention will take up regional and national topics, with a generous portion of the program allotted to entertainment.

Art education in the United States will be the subject of discussion July 11, first day of the conclave, and on July 12 the symposium will take time off to visit San Francisco art centers and the Golden Gate International Exposition. The annual banquet is planned for the evening of the second day. The rise of art west of the Mississippi River will be discussed on the third and final day of the meeting, July 13.

Week's Art Calendar

Music Notes and Activities

Felicia Rybier will present a student's piano recital next Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock at 1728 Connecticut avenue. The participants are Jane and Judith Kushner, Barbara and Bernice Susser, Rona and Ina Bass, Rita Smith, Henrietta Ostrower, Marie Lou Dettmar, Lorraine Higger, Evelyn Cohen and Morton Steinberg.

• • • •

Excerpts from Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be sung at 8 o'clock tonight by the quartet of Northminister Presbyterian Church, assisted by Edith Rice, Anne Evans, Leona Swallen, Francis H. Townsend and G. Mallet Prevost. Olive McD. Witters is the director and Howard S. Miller the organist.

• • • •

Rae Alice Ebner will present a student's piano recital Friday night at 8 o'clock in the Y. W. C. A. assembly hall. The participants are Margaret Colston, Evelyn Cooley, Frances Kimmerling, Robert Mathias, Jane and Patricia McEntee, Stanley Miller and Anne Ramos.

• • • •

L. Haygood Browne will present Eleanor Mary Bailey, Vernon Louise Hodge, Edna Kathryne Knowles and Walter Meayers Edwards in a piano recital at 4 o'clock this afternoon in the Kennedy-Warren ballroom. Henry Field will be guest artist.

• • • •

Commencement exercises of the Von Unschuld University of Music were held last Friday evening in Pierce Hall. A program was performed by students of the piano, violin and harp departments. The graduates were Mrs. Thomas North (piano artist course) and Mrs. Marion Hess (teacher's training course), both receiving the degree of bachleor of music. Mrs. North gave her graduation recital June 11 in the Women's City Club, and Mrs. Hess was heard June 12 in the Y. W. C. A. music room.

• • • •

The Florence Howard Studios of Singing will present the Young Singers' Group on Friday evening at 1408 New Hampshire avenue. Ensemble numbers will include a group of old English songs and the opening chorus from Smetana's "Prodana Nevesta." Solos and duets will be sung by Mildred Anderson, Suzanne Schwartz, Marie Mowrer, Helen Claire Lyons, Myra Lillian Mitchell, Joanne Derrick and Ruth Marjorie Prentice. Marjorie G. Davis is the accompanist.

• • • •

Jeannette Bittner, resident soprano, leaves this week for several months' study with Enrico Rosati in New York, preliminary to opening a studio here in September. In 1936 she won the young artists' contest of the D. C. Federation of Music Clubs and the Capital District contest in Baltimore. For the past two years she has directed the young people's glee club of National City Christian Church. She has sung at the President's Cup regatta ball for several seasons and appeared as soloist with the Civic Orchestra.

• • • •

Hazel Gerbich will present her piano and violin pupils in two studio recitals today. The participants at 3:30 o'clock will be Dorothy and Betty Clark, Ann Caron, Shirley and George Conner, Barbara and Norma Hudson, Betty Jane Hamilton, Connie and Charles Little, Gale Greenwood, Adele Paroni, Lorraine Peterman, Nancy Moul, Helen Sheppard, Oscar Stine and Janice Wheatley. The following will be presented at 7:30 o'clock: Patricia and Julia Ann Ahearn, Mary Barrott, Bob Greenwood, Barbara and Frances Harris, Ann Hyde, Janet Mosman, Josepha Fuller, Joan and Charles Wheatley, Elizabeth Schneider, Patsy Robertson and Louise Terrett.

• • • •

Free organ recitals of 40 minutes' duration will be given by D. Sterling Wheelwright on Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings at 8 o'clock in the Washington chapel L. D. S., Sixteenth street and Columbia road. Edna C. Wheelwright, soprano, will assist on Friday, singing Hahn's "L'Heure Exquise" and Strauss' "To You." A special recital for the Washington Rotary Club will be given Wednesday noon.

• • • •

Iva Loughlen Guy is presenting some of her piano pupils this afternoon in her residence studio. Those appearing are Nancy Abbot, Margaret Aiken, Harris Ball, Betsie and Kimbrough Bassett, Peggy Jo Brown, Joane Dillon, Barbara Harter, Barbara Latta, Martha Woodwell Lane, Jean Lund, Ann Myers, Patsy Thompson, Janet Tooley, Margaret Tremearne and Mary van Veen.

• • • •

Karl Holer, resident composer, has recently written a number of songs, one of which, "The Bridge," is religious in character. This song, dedicated to Clara Moran Bernheimer, was sung by her last Sunday night in a concert by the choir of First Reformed Church, with Louise Ehrmann laying the violoncello obligato and the composer at the organ. It will be sung again by Pauline Holer on June 18 at Hood College, Frederick, Md.

• • • •

Pupils of Gretchen Hood will be presented in a song recital on Thursday evening in the Washington Club. Those taking part are Dorothy Barry, Frances Campbell, Bernadette Crouch, Mary de Vakos, Minnie Mae Emmerich, Margaret Myerly, Edna Roche, Martha Stroh, Grace Vitality and Robert Jarrett.

Rodzinski Does Tchaikovsky's 5th As Written

100th Anniversary Celebration Continues In Full Swing

By Jay Walz

The celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Peter Ilich Tchaikovsky (May 7, 1840) continues its happy course. Some orchestra conductors, anticipating the actual date of the composer's birth, began the centennial with special Tchaikovsky programs last season. Others according to announcement will honor him in summer festivals.

In the composer's native Russia, where less melodic composers of a newer day have held favored places in the Soviet sun, the music appreciation line has shifted, enabling a writer in the Moscow newspaper, "Pravda," recently to find him (Tchaikovsky) "the most beloved composer of the Soviet masses." A Moscow street has been renamed in his honor, and a monument has been ordered.

In America, Tchaikovsky's popularity has never waned, and now on the composer's 100th anniversary riding the crest of a seemingly petrified wave. The composer of the Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Symphonies—and of the "Andante Cantabile," and of the "Nutcracker" Suite—hits the requests programs regularly.

Considering all this there can be little doubt that there is still room for more recording of the Symphony No. 5 in E minor, or that such a recording deserves the gala performance given it by Columbia and the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Rodzinski conducting (Set M-406, five large discs).

Rodzinski does Tchaikovsky the honor of playing the score straight—of stiffening its backbone, and toughening the melodic skin. The over-sentimentalized version is not for him. And so while this album is not the first recording of the Fifth, nor probably the last, it will stand out for a long time as a fresh, vigorous one.

The recording was made in Severance Hall, home of the Cleveland Hall. Apparently the setting affords as good performances for phonographs as it does for concerts because the music for this album has been picked up sensitively, clearly and with a minimum of non-musical interference.

Columbia's contribution to the Tchaikovsky celebration also has a chamber of music offering. Album M-407, three large discs, presents the Quartet in D Major played by the recently reorganized Roth String Quartet (the group that played in Library of Congress concerts last month.) Only familiar part of this composition to most of us is the second movement, the famous "Andante Cantabile." This part the Roths play with the mellowness expected of a group that is itself a hundred years old. There is warmth to the whole performance actually, as if the players were dedicating themselves to an eloquent Tchaikovsky tribute. The recording is smooth.

We have just passed another centennial that has been duly marked by the record makers. Niccolo Paganini, the violinists' hero, died 100 years ago last May 27, and to commemorate that occasion Victor has issued a three-record album (M-672) of Paganini's Caprices, Volume 1.

The album is a suitable anniversary piece, because it gives expression to those things for which Paganini stood—mastery of technique, brilliant effects that have been made violinists since the awe of their audiences.

This set which memoralizes the death of one violinist, marks the debut on Victor records of a rising master of the instrument, 19-year-old Ossy Renardy, who has, apparently not in vain, made a specialty of the difficulties in Paganini scores.

Concert at Hotel Benefits Red Cross

A concert for the benefit of the American Red Cross will be given Wednesday night in the Carlton Hotel by Martha Norton and Walter Schoeneweis, duo-pianists, and a string quartet composed of Milton Schwartz, Jeno Sevely, George Wargo and John Alden Finckel.

The duo pianists, recently heard here in a recital at the Arts Club, will play a Siciliano by Bach, Pirani's Gavotte, Ravel's transcription of Debussy's "Fetes" and Max Reger's Introduction and Fugue. Milton Schwartz and his colleagues will play the D minor quartet of Mozart, Frank Bridges' arrangement of two English airs and George Wargo's arrangement of a Russian dance by Chaikovski.

Misuse of "Modern" Estimates in Music

By Ray C. B. Brown.

A recent article in this column on the accomplishments of the Washington Composers' Club has evoked from one reader the comment that the music of these writers, insofar as he has heard it performed, seems to him conventional and conservative and that the only member of the group who shows an understanding of modern idioms is Mary Howe. It would seem from this remark that my correspondent believes that contemporary music must necessarily be composed in harmonic styles which have carelessly been dubbed modern simply because they came into prominence since 1900. Since this point of view is shared by many, particularly by those who like to feel that they belong to the "intelligentsia" in the pursuit of the latest artistic vagaries, a few words about this illogical attitude may not be amiss.

BROWN

The arts of music, as developed in Europe and accepted as a body of literature based on certain agreed procedures in comparison, is so recent a phenomenon in the history of the human race as to be modern in its entirety. To supply the term only to music composed in systems of polytonality, atonality and dissonant counterpoint devised in the present century is to miss the whole point. Monteverdi and Bach knew all about dissonance and its proper use for purposes of contrast or suspense, and they were wise enough to refrain from its abuse. Since they were musicians thoroughly versed in their craft, we can even assume that they were sufficiently intelligent to have thought about atonality and polytonality and to have decided that the disadvantages of these systems outweighed the advantages. The germs of so-called modern music are to be found in the works of composers of the seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries.

What do we really mean when we designate music composed since 1900 as "modern"? We mean that about the turn of the century some composers, wishing to break away from traditional methods, began to experiment by raising into importance harmonic elements which had previously been subordinated. They did not invent anything new, but merely rearranged the elements and changed the accents. Some of these composers proved quite conclusively that the amount of dissonance in proportion to consonance could be safely increased without injury to musical beauty; others recklessly turned the older procedure upside down, so that dissonance became the rule and consonance the exception. This completely bewildered the average listener, because the human ear normally prefers consonance to dissonance.

Because of its apparent novelty, dissonant music has attained a vogue among those to whom novelty seems important, and consonant music is dismissed by them as old fashioned and outmoded. In their vocabulary modern has come to have a very limited application. Because a contemporary composer writes a symphony in the classical form and in a harmonic idiom readily understood, they say that he is conventional, and that he is imitating the composers of the past. Is it any more a crime to imitate Beethoven than it is to imitate Schoenberg? As a matter of fact, a composer of today who could successfully imitate Beetohven would be a genius, whereas imitation of Schoenberg is no trick at all.

Music, like spoken language, is addressed to auditors for the purpose of communicating emotion and thought. If it is written in an idiom meaningless to the majority of the auditors, it fails of its purpose. A writer like James Joyce, who has employed in "Finnegan's Wake" an idiom intelligible only to himself, has deliberately limited his appeal to readers, just as a "modern" composer, who uses a harmonic idiom transparent for his ear alone, thereby restricting the number of auditors who can claim to understand him.

Significant and beautiful music can still be composed today in the conventional form, and it is exactly as "modern" as the latest abracadabra in the twelve-tone system. The form of the music is of no consequence as long as the composer is saying something worthy of hearing, but the idiom is of the utmost importance, for what is being said must be understood.

U. S. Navy Band To Play Music Of the Americas

The ninety-sixth concert featuring music of the American republics will be presented by the Pan American Union Friday night at 9 o'clock in the Aztec Garden. Under the direction of Lieut. Charles Benter, the United States Navy Band will play the major part of the program devoted exclusively to compositions of the western hemisphere.

The guest artist will be Federico Jimeno, Colombian barytone, who appeared last April in a Constitution Hall program in honor of the fiftieth anniversary of the Pan American Union. A native of Barranquilla, Colombia, Jimeno studied first at the Conservatoria del Atlantico and later in San Jose, Costa Rica, where he sang in the National Theater. He then joined the National Opera Company of Panama. After a period of study in Italy and Vienna, he made a concert tour of South America.

Mrs. Adair Leads Pierce Hall Singers

Under the direction of Mrs. Chester Adair, the Schubert Singers will give their eighth spring concert on Wednesday night at 8:15 in Pierce Hall. The organization is composed of J. Edmond Veitch, Mark Odell, John van der Sys, Oscar Kuldell, Ben Roberts and Hugh Miller. Their program includes the prelude from Landon Ronald's "Cycle of Life," Gustav Klem's "Sounds," Sibelius' "Valse Triste," Brewer's arrangement of "By Bendemeer's Stream," Pringle Scott's "The Old Road" and Schubert's "Ave Maria."

Constance Russell, pianist, will be guest artist, playing Mendelssohn's E minor prelude, Myra Hess' version of Bach's "Jesus, Joy of Man's Desiring," Godovski's arrangement of a tambourin by Rameau, Debussy's "Reflets dans l'eau" and Dohnanyi's paraphrase of a waltz from Delibes' "Naila" ballet.

Civic Grand Opera Will Present 'Lammermoor'

Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor" will be presented by the Civic Grand Opera Association at the Potomac Watergate on Friday evening, July 19, with Joseph Bentonelli, of the Metropolitan Opera, singing the tenor role of Edgardo. Other principal singers will be drawn from the rosters of the Metropolitan and Chicago companies. The orchestra will consist of professionals under the direction of a Metropolitan conductor. Performances of "Manon" and the double bill of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci" will follow.

A local chorus will be supplemented by members of the Metropolitan Opera chorus.

Band Programs Are Announced

John S. M. Zimmermann leader of the United States Soldiers' Home Band, announces the following programs for three concerts to be given this week at 7 p. m. in the bandstand:

Tuesday—"Rainbow Division March" (Nirella), Overture to "Stradella" (Flotow), "Sursum Corda" (Elgar), selections from "Romeo et Juliette" (Gounod), "Scatterbrains" (Masters), "The Husking Bee" (Picket), "Pleasures of the Past" (Waldteufel), "President Roosevelt March" (Francesco).

Miss Flagstad To Sing July 31 At Watergate

National Symphony Summer Program Includes 4 Operas

With the engagement of Kirsten Flagstad definitely arranged for July 31, the summer series of the National Symphony Orchestra at the Potomac Watergate is taking shape as the most ambitious in the history of the organization. In addition to twelve concerts there will be four operatic performances in which the entire orchestra will participate, and the list of soloists and guest conductors includes many distinguished persons.

Hans Kindler will conduct the opening concert on Sunday evening, July 7, the closing concert and perhaps two other programs during the summer. As soon as arrangements have been completed for the engagement of guest conductors and soloists, the detailed schedule will be announced by the summer concerts committee.

The first operatic performance has been set for July 17 and will be supervised by Fortune Gallo, impresario of the San Carlo Opera Company, whose 3 years' experience in management has included successful seasons of open-air opera presented at Jones Beach and Randall Island, New York. The date of the second serious opera has not yet been decided.

Two Gilbert and Sullivan light operas will be presented by a company that has had a great success in Boston for several seasons. The appearance of the group here will follow an engagement with the Philadelphia Orchestra in Robin Hood Dell. "The Gondoliers" will be given August 4 and "H. M. S. Pinafore" on August 7.

Swing Sessions

with BILL GOTTLIEB

Of all local bands, Bill Downer's (Club Nightingale) most resembles the "name" bands of records and radio. Like name bands and unlike most other local outfits, it is big (13 pieces), carefully rehearsed (to help counteract its youth and inexperience) and full of vitality (because of its youth). And now it looks as though the boys will not only sound like a name band, but will actually be one. Next week, Charlie Spivak, swing's first trumpeter, will take it over, lock, stock and barrelhouse, and put it on the big time circuit. Bill Downer will manage and help direct the orchestra. And oh, Johnny—don't forget about Bonnie Baker at Loew's Capital next week.

Record Briefs

Righteous Swing: Charlie Barnet continues to borrow his principal ideas from others to produce his own successful hybrid. This time he chooses the Glen Gray showpiece, "No Name Jive," and handles it in strictly Count Basie style . . . Relaxed, delicate and vaguely Oriental is Bob Crosby's "Speak Easy" . . . "Bugle Call Rag," Glenn Miller proves he's only human by producing a mass of noises that should prove tasteless to all but the most indiscriminating j-bugs. However, the reverse, "Slow Freight," is executed in the exciting "Tuxedo Junction" tradition. . . Artie Shaw's third release with his 31-piece band is "Mister Meadowlark" and "My Fantasy." By now I'm convinced that if Shaw is ever to set the world on end again, he'd better return to 15 pieces or buy his second farm and again try to write the "great American novel." There's much more music coming from the Tiny Buster Bailey (actually John Kirby) sextet on Varsity's "Blue Room" and "Am I Blue" . . . Prewar France contributes to le Jazz Hot this month with the Quintet of the Hot Club of France's "Daphne" and "I Wonder Where My Baby Is Tonight" (this time on Decca) and with expatriate Dickie Wells' "I've Found a New Baby" and "Hangin' Around Boudon" (Victor) . . . Lionel Hampton's All-Stars—and I mean all-stars—step in "Tempo and Swing" and "My Buddy" . . . The mellow Mills Brothers-Louis Armstrong combination polish "Cherry" and "Boog It" while sprightly Van Alexander pairs the same "Cherry" with "Slap Jack" . . . Earl Hines superb piano and colorful orchestra have finally recorded their theme, "Deep Forest."

Popular Swing and Sweet: More records of Berlin hits from "Louisiana Purchase"—"The Lord Done Fixed Up My Soul" "Fools Fall In Love," "Latins Know How," "You're Lonely And I'm Lonely" and "It'll Come To You" variously handled by Mary Martin, Jimmy Dorsey, Shirley Howard, Tony Pastor . . . Tommy Dorsey outlovlies Glenn Miller on smooth "Yours Is My Heart Alone."

Tune in for Bill Gottleib's program "Men With Batons" on WRC every Saturday from 7:30 to 8 p. m.

'Thrill Night' Plans Near Completion

Ball Game, Parade Feature Masonic Show June 21

The various Masonic committees headed by Marvin E. Fowler, president of the Worshipful Masters Association of 1940, and Mrs. Eleanor B. Smithson, president of the Matrons and Patrons Association of the Order of the Eastern Star, are completing the final arrangements for the annual night of thrills to be held at Griffith Stadium on June 21 for the benefit of the Masonic and Eastern Star Home.

The entertainment will begin at 4:30 p. m. with a baseball game between two amateur baseball teams. From 7 to 7:45 p. m. there will be a band concert. Crowning of the queen will begin at 7:45 o'clock.

A pageant consisting of the various uniform bodies of the Masonic fraternity and numerous bands and military units will begin at 8 o'clock. This will be followed by professional entertainment—tumblers, jugglers, acrobatics, clowns and trained animals. Acts will be staged on four platforms so everyone will see a complete show. The entertainment will be concluded at 10:30 p. m. with a surprise finale.

Russel H. Thompson, master of Pentalpha Lodge, announces that the stated meeting tomorrow evening will be devoted to entertainment by the cast from Job's Daughters, Bethel No. 2, headed by Miss Winifred Smith. A drill by the team will follow. The evening has been designated "Father and Son Night."

Congress Lodge will confer the entered apprentice degree on Thursday evening.

Albert Pike Lodge will hold a short business meeting tomorrow evening, followed by entertainment and a degree by Bethel, No. 1, of Job's Daughters.

Osiris Lodge will confer the entered apprentice degree Wednesday evening. Senior Deacon John T. Vivian will be in the east and Toastmaster Orville E. Megby will de-ver the charge. Past Master Jacob Sherbahn will be in charge of the Osiris Greeters.

Sojourners Lodge will confer the entered apprentice degree tomorrow evening with Senior Deacon E. Richard Spurrier in the East.

Marvin E. Fowler, master of Lafayette Lodge, announces the master masons degree Thursday evening.

A business meeting of the Petworth Lodge will be held Thursday evening.

The Fellowcraft Club of Takoma Lodge will meet Thursday evening. William W. Waller, master of West Gate Lodge, announces the Fellowcraft degree Wednesday evening.

Benjamin B. French Lodge will confer the master Masons degree on a class of candidates with Senior Warden Louis J. Mancusco in the east.

Hiram Lodge will have a business meeting and confer the entered apprentice degree Thursday evening.

King David Lodge will have a business and social evening Tuesday.

Anacostia Lodge will hold a business meeting tomorrow evening and confer the entered apprentice degree.

The Anchor Masonic Club of the Department of Commerce, Maritime Commission, and Civil Aeronautics Authority will hold its annual garden party tomorrow at 6 p. m. at the Brooke Farm Tea House, Rockville road and Taylor street, Chevy Chase, Md.

Lebanon Lodge No. 7, F. & A. M., will confer the Master Masons' degree at 8 p. m. Saturday at a special communication. The Lebanon Fellowcraft Club will hold its regular monthly meeting Monday, June 24, with entertainment and refreshments for members and guests.

Service Sidelights

'Combat Car' Is Just A Tank Gone 'Horsey'

By J. G. N.

Have you ever wondered why the Army called some of its tanks "tanks" and some "combat cars." The man in the street, I am sure, has often scratched his head on seeing an armored, tracked vehicle pictured in newspaper or magazine with the caption reading: "Cavalry combat car in maneuvers at Fort Knox." It looked like every other tank he had ever seen or heard about, but here it was called something else. All very confusing.

J. G. NORRIS

Of course, any Army man could tell him that a "cavalry combat car" really was a tank, but he might hem and haw if asked why it had another name. The story behind the duplication of names is an interesting one.

Tanks were a World War product, slow lumbering craft which moved along about the speed of a foot soldier, and were regarded as an infantry weapon. They operated with the doughboys and quite naturally the development of mechanized units after the war was placed under that branch of the Army.

In the American Army in 1917-18, however, a separate Tank Corps was organized. Afterward when Congress was drafting amendments to the National Defense Act to incorporate lessons of the war, the tankmen tried to perpetuate their corps as a separate branch of the Army.

In the light of the German development of the tank as one of the most vital factors of warfare, it appears now that the decision not to establish a separate Tank Corps may have been a serious mistake. Set up as a separate branch, with a major general in charge, the tank might well have been developed to a greater extent than it is today in the American Army.

Be this as it may—and you can get arguments on both sides—Congress decided to put the development of tanks under the infantry, and wrote it into the law that way. Had it not been for the controversy, there would have been no legal declaration that tanks must be used by the infantry, any more than Congress would declare it as the permanent law of the land that only the doughboy can shoot rifles and the cavalrymen must use sabers.

As time passed, however, the tank progressed. Army Ordnance experts and a civilian inventor named J. Walter Christie developed faster and faster mechanized vehicles. By the end of the '20s, it was apparent to many forward thinking officers that the new speedy tank, from a tactical point of view, also had a place in the cavalry.

Many Opposed 'Iron Horse'

Many cavalrymen resisted the new "iron horse." Nothing could take the place of the horsemen of old, said they. Others, however, saw how well this new development fit into the traditional role of cavalry. It could raid and reconnoiter and perform most of the other cavalry tasks, with much greater speed and range though perhaps less dependability than horses, they held.

But the law confined tank operations to the infantry. Gen. Douglas MacArthur, then chief of staff, cut through the barrier with characteristic directness. Give the cavalry some of the tanks and we'll call them something else, he ordered. Going to the French as usual for its terminology, the cavalry tank was officially designated the "combat car" from "chars de combat," French name for a tank.

Thereafter, the development of tanks was handled by two branches, with its use as a distinct force in large numbers being carried forward by the cavalry. Today we have three infantry tank regiments in process of organization, plus some separate tank companies, while our one mechanized cavalry brigade is being expanded to a division.

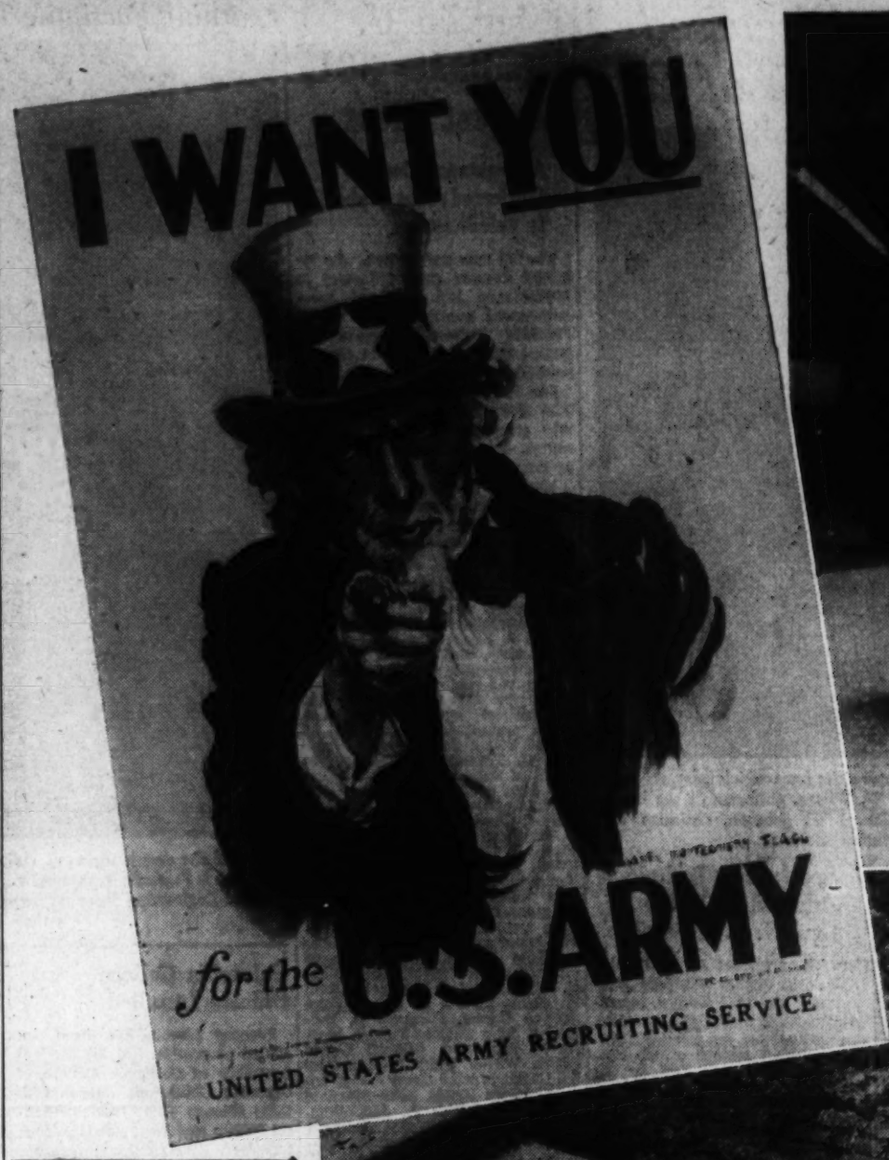
There is little difference between the infantry and cavalry tank. For years the only material distinction was that most of the former had two turrets and the latter only one. Lately the infantry has added armor and a 37 millimeter gun to its tank, which has cut down its speed and maneuverability. It also has developed a medium tank of about 18 tons and has plans for heavier vehicles, perhaps two, three or four times this size.

Cavalry Also Adding Armor

But the cavalry also is adding armor to its tanks, following the lessons of the European war, and the infantry is discarding one of its tank turrets. So the light tanks of both branches may continue to be quite similar.

In view of the great success of the German "panzer" divisions in the war, the new preparedness program carries funds for the equipment and men for one new mechanized division plus additional smaller units and the equipment for four more such divisions.

The disposition of this large additional number of tanks now hangs in the balance. Whether you call them "tanks" or "combat cars," mechanized units will be a prominent part of the Army of the future, and the War Department's best brains are now trying to decide what branch of the service will control the future of mechanized warfare in the American Army.



Steps like these will be common as America seeks new manpower for its Army. Uncle Sam beckons the young man to join the service in the above street poster. Later the recruit glances over his new equipment which is standard in the Army

Maj. James Lyon Elected to Head Veterans' Group

Maj. James Alexander Lyon was elected commander of the District of Columbia Chapter of the Military Order of the World War at the annual meeting and luncheon held at the Mayflower Hotel last week.

Maj. Lyon, who has held several offices in the order, including that of senior vice commander last year, succeeds Col. Bynum K. Cash as chapter commander.

The luncheon was held under the auspices of the Hereditary Members of the chapter with Lieut. John Lewis Smith, Jr., presiding. Senator Scott W. Lucas, of Illinois, was the speaker.

Associated with Maj. Lyon as officers of the chapter are many outstanding officers of the World War. They include Rear Admiral William R. Furlong, senior vice commander; Lieut. Col. Harry F. Cunningham, Col. J. Monroe Johnson, Rear Admiral Ernest J. King, Maj. Gen. Frank Parker and Comdr. Homer N. Wallin, junior vice commanders; Maj. Arthur R. Robinson, judge advocate; Maj. Gen. W. C. Baker, historian; Lieut. Lewis G. Beardsley, surgeon; Capt. Robert D. Workman, chaplain; Lieut. Col. Edwin S. Bettelheim, adjutant. The members of the staff are Gen. George C. Marshal, Lieut. Comdr. Arthur D. Condon, Col. Joseph C. Fegan, Cmdr. Charles W. Cairnes, Lieut. Col. Peyton G. Nevitt, Lieut. Col. Ralph C. Bishop, Lieut. Comdr. Charles C. Glover, Lieut. John Lewis Smith, jr., Maj. Gen. Peter C. Harris, Col. Charles G. Mortimer, Col. Charles G. Mortimer, Col. Charles F. B. Price, Lieut. Andrew Edminston, Maj. Russell P. Freeman, Brig. Gen. Oliver L. Spaulding, Lieut. Samuel L. Leithiser and Lieut. Adlai Magee.

This Campus Class At Maryland U. Speaks French Only

A French colony on the campus of the University of Maryland during the summer session will speak that language exclusively under the guidance of several natives of France.

The colony will center in Gerneaux Hall and the Home Economics Practice House, where students must refrain from using English for the six weeks of their course in literature and civilization. The colony carries on its own social activities, and even at meal time the conversation will be in French.

In the summer session beginning June 24, Dr. Emile Cailliet, professor of French literature and civilization at Scripps College, California, is visiting professor. Among others on the staff are Dr. William Falls, professor of French, University of Maryland, director; Armand Begue, Brooklyn College; Mme. Louise M. Begue, Lycee Francais, New York; Mme. Cecile de Chauny, Marjorie Webster School; Helen B. Wilcox, instructor, University of Maryland. Thirteen courses are offered in French.

Barck, Mrs. Eva Grant Marshall, John Flett, Miss Sally Tinius, Claude Parker, Maj. Charles A. Search, Mrs. F. J. Neithammer, Miss Louise Osterwald, Miss Rose Harrigan, Charles Gropper, Mrs. Charles Orr, John Abramson and Francis H. Tewes.

Naval Reserve Points Toward Training Trip

Unit Emphasizes Gunnery and Battle Problems at Sea

The local battalion of the Naval Reserve has launched an intensive training program pointed toward the cruise which the group will take on the U. S. S. Wyoming in September.

Lieut. W. Croft Jennings, battalion commanding officer, has altered the normal training routine, in which half of the weekly drill period was devoted to practical work and half to general instruction, to a routine in which the emphasis is almost entirely on practical work, with particular emphasis on battle problems and gunner exercises. A new 5-inch loading machine has been rigged which will enable the three divisions of the battalion to acquire additional practice in handling this type of gun for broadside firing.

Under the new routine, the weekly drill will be divided into three periods, at least one of which will be devoted by each division to battle problems, the three divisions alternating at this work. In this way each division will work on a battle problem each drill night. During the two remaining periods of the drill, the divisions will engage in lifeboat drill, practice in gunnery safety precautions, study shipboard etiquette, methods of damage control, handling of fireroom casualties. The whole purpose of these drills, exercises and study is to thoroughly prepare the men for naval life at sea.

It is expected that this intensive work will place the battalion in a good state of readiness for the coming cruise. The cruise report of the battalion last year was of a high order, but the battalion hopes to make an even better record this year.

Members of the Naval Reserve Officers Association of the District made a tour through the Navy ship-model testing basin at Carderock, Md., last Wednesday in connection with their regular June meeting. Owing to the precautions being observed by the department against the admission of unknown persons into key places, only officers of the Naval and Marine Corps Reserves were admitted and as a result the usual quota of guests at the association's gatherings were absent from the June meeting.

Lieut. H. B. Atkinson (SC), president of the local chapter, has announced that there will be no meetings during July and August.

Roosevelt May Ask 200,000 to Enlist in Army

By John G. Norris

A Nation-wide recruiting drive reminiscent of the early days of the World War is about to be launched by the Army and Navy.

More than 200,000 new soldiers, sailors and marines must be enrolled under the preparedness program. Under our laws they must be volunteers. Skeptics say the job cannot be done, that only by a conscription act could such a large number of men be obtained.

The Government thinks otherwise. Admitting the whole country must get behind the recruiting drive for it to be successful, officials are confident that it will and that the new men all will be in uniform within a few months.

Just as President Roosevelt called on civilian leaders of the Nation to assist in turning out the huge quantities of arms for the national defense, so he is expected to ask the country to get behind this other task.

State Committees To Handle Task

The job, under plans of the Army and Navy, will be handled by State Governors and local committees, instead of the small service recruiting staffs. A complete prospectus for such an emergency effort long has been in the files of the War and Navy Department and is now being dusted off for use.

Under the plan, the President would ask the Governors of the 48 States to form committees of prominent citizens who would work with the State adjutant general and his staff to launch a drive. Under them there would be local committees in every city, town and hamlet to round up the actual recruits.

Details of the campaign would be left to the local committees, but if the World War pattern is followed we may expect preparedness rallies, with martial music and rousing speeches, veteran proselyting likely youths and probably movie actresses and local beauties offering kisses to men who volunteer.

Under the $5,000,000,000 preparedness program the Army is to be raised from 227,000 to 375,000 men, the Navy from 145,000 to 170,000 and the Marine Corps from 25,000 to 34,000. The air services will enlist about 18,000 for pilot training while normal replacements will swell the total still higher.

The regular recruiting services of the armed forces, expanded in recent months, will play an important part in the drive. The Army and Navy high command, however, fearful of world conditions, wants to get the new men enrolled and trained as soon as possible.

Gen. George C. Marshall, Army chief of staff, revealed a few days ago that he would ask President Roosevelt to invoke the emergency recruiting plan if Congress provides the money for the additional men. This is now assured.

The project is an essential part of the war-time selective service program and has been an approved phase of war plans for years. It was prepared to serve as a stop-gap in furnishing men for the Army and Navy after war comes and before a draft law could be passed and put into operation.

Can Also Be Used As Peace Effort

But while contemplated as a war measure, the Army and Navy chiefs see no reason why it cannot be a peace effort, a plan to give the standing Army sufficient strength to meet any situation which might arise in the Western Hemisphere which otherwise might grow into a major war.

A description of the plan, officially known as "The Civilian Effort" is given in a pamphlet prepared by the War and Navy Departments. The publication, entitled "American Selective Service" declares:

"It cannot be hoped that official recruiting parties such as are used in peace and were used in 1917 will ever secure men enough to carry out the mobilization schedules. Recruiting offices will of course continue, in greatly increased numbers, and will accept suitable applicants, but far more effective means are required.

"The Army and Navy are not expected to produce money and supplies; these things are furnished them, and their job is to use them in the war effort. The same principle applies to manpower. The Selective Service process is production of men by each community according to its just quota. The idea behind 'The Civilian Effort' is the same; each community of the Nation shall contribute its share of the necessary men, as it contributes its share of the money and munitions. The armed services will be responsible for making soldiers of them.

"Like the selective service system, the 'civilian effort' is decentralized to the Governor of each State, whose peacetime planning agent is his adjutant general. When the emergency arises each Governor will be called upon to organize a State-wide recruiting drive.

"The agencies in direct contact with each Governor are the Army corps area, the naval district and the Marine Corps recruiting division in which his State lies. Each of these agencies will allot a quota of men expected from that State and will arrange to receive the men at its recruiting stations.

"The Governor in turn will suballot a quota to each county or urban unit. A civilian committee in each community will produce the recruits. The promotional work to accomplish this result in each community is similar to other 'drives,' the mechanics of which are well understood and frequently employed. It can be boosted to some extent by national and State promotional efforts, but ultimately the burden rests upon the leading men of each local area and will furnish a real test of leadership."

Anticipating the approval of the expansion, the Army has already begun recruiting beyond its allowed strength of 227,000 men. Some 8,000 men have already been enrolled, and it hopes to reach 242,000 before the end of the month without invoking the "civilian effort."

A total of 450 recruiting stations, manned by 68 officers and 748 enlisted men, are at work. This force probably will be increased. Manufacturers will deliver to the Army next month 18 "mobile recruiting stations," large truck-trailers which will carry the campaign to the small towns and country districts. Each of these specially designed vehicles will contain a public address system and a movie projector to show applicants what Army life is like.

Radio broadcasts are being arranged and Hollywood is cooperating with newsreels and feature pictures.

More than 350 national trade associations were recently asked by the War Department to carry recruiting advertisements in their journals and magazines and to request individual members to place Army posters in show windows or on their premises. All have replied, promising to do so.

Some 500,000 new recruiting posters are being printed and will soon be plastered over the country. About 25,000 have already been broadcast.

How successful a full-scale drive will be officials do not know. It never has been tried before. Gen. Marshall recently told Congress he planned to enlist men for one year instead of the usual three in order to stimulate enlistments. He did not say so, but officers pointed out privately that should war come within this time all men are held "for the duration" and six months after peace is declared.

Recruiting efforts in the past few weeks have shown that the nearby States, the South, Southwest and Middle Western States to be up to quota, with the Pacific Coast, Western States and particularly New York and New England trailing.

Whether this is indicative of sentiment throughout the country is not yet established. Officials, however, are hopeful the Nation will unite behind the preparedness drive and produce the men as well as the arms to keep war out of the Americas.

Scientists Defense Hope, Says Chemist

Mineral Research, New Inventions Seen National Necessity

By G. B. Lal,
International News Service Science Editor.

New York, June 15 (INS).—One of the greatest services of American scientists to national defense will be through reaserches on "strategic minerals," Prof. Colin G. Fink, famed electro-chemist of Columbia University, stated today.

As a member of the National Research Council, Dr. Fink will be among this Nation's leading scientists cooperating with the United States Government. The scientist was asked about the role of chemical engineering, especially applied to metals and similar raw materials necessary for war defense. Said Prof. Fink:

"The chemist is bound to play a leading part in the defense preparations. It is not necessary to go into details.

"But it is worth stating that any chances for an early victory of the Allies will depend upon some new work by the chemical scientists—for example, some new inventions.

"The making of a gasoline that will aid an airplane to go greater distances, the construction of airplanes of lower weight but greater strength to carry larger bombs, and other such developments could turn the scales in war very quickly.

Even Routine Research Of Prime Importance

"Even the routine kind of laboratory research is of tremendous importance. For example, army material sent here from the European fields will be analyzed.

"The fragments of a shell or bomb the broken pieces of a piston or some other airplane part, will be examined as to the chemical composition, tensile strength and other properties. Thus one would be able to learn what the possible adversary is doing, and how one could do better.

"Systematic investigations will be along several important lines. For example, the problem of the chemical gases, of guns and protecting armors will have to be studied.

"The piercing power of a shell, from any gun, depends upon the velocity and the sharpness and hardness of the tip of the shell. It is the tip that has to meet and penetrate the sides of the tanks and the warships.

"The protection of tanks, ships and so on will require metals of tougher quality.

"Theoretical chemistry will suggest various possible combinations of chemical compounds to provide explosives of greater power.

"Our situation is different today from what it was 25 years ago. We have now all the nitrates and numerous other materials necessary for military preparedness. Above all we have chemical processes and scientific skill of the highest order.

U. S. Can Produce Better Airplanes Than Can Europe

"We can produce better airplanes than they have in Europe. In dyes, medicines and countless other things, we are ahead even of the Germans, and independent of them or of anyone else.

"However, new processes will be invented in all of these major fields. Extremely important is the question of strategic minerals.

"Nickel, chromium and tungsten are most essential for armament construction, and for related purposes of offence or defense. Without nickel and chromium, no battleships and guns; without chromium and tungsten, no tools for the efficient fabrication of the countless parts and products of armament are possible.

"The United States has no nickel worth mentioning. Its 3,000 tons production in 1939, a by-product of the electrolytic copper industry, was less than one-seventh of nickel consumption for the year.

"Mercury is of varied uses, including its function in explosives as a fulminating substance," said Dr. Fink. "This metal or its mineral, like those of antimony, manganese and tin, have to be obtained either from abroad, or by newer methods of extraction.

"The chemical engineer may be expected to aid in estimating how much of each strategic mineral must be obtained and stored up. He will be engaged in devising methods for extracting these minerals from low-grade ores.

"In some cases it will be his assignment to invent possible substitutes for some of the minerals not easily available, especially during war times."

Lieut. Leon Brusiloff, Band Leader, Promoted To Captaincy in U. S. Marine Corps Reserves

Headquarters, United States Marine Corps, has announced the promotion of First Lieut. Leon Brusiloff, formerly attached to the Fifth Battalion, United States Marine Corps Reserves, to the rank of captain. Capt. Brusiloff is a well-known Washingtonian, having organized and directed a number of well-known musical units throughout the city. The success of the Fifth Battalion Band, numbering now approximately 60 men, is due in part to the early development and instruction of its members by Capt. Brusiloff.

During the field training period of the Fifth Battalion, Marine Corps Reserve, at Quantico, from August 18 to September 1, the Fifth Battalion will merge with the First Battalion, Fifth Regiment, First Brigade, Fleet Marine Force.

The First Brigade is commanded by Brig. Gen. Holland M. Smith, U. S. M. C. Lieut. Col. Alfred H. Nolle, U. S. M. C., commands the Fifth Regiment and Lieut. Col. Charles T. Brooks, U. S. M. C., commands the First Battalion.

At Quantico, the combined battalions, for training and tactical purpose, will be known as the Fifth Battalion, each reserve unit of which will be augmented by the addition of regular Marines to bring the battalion up to full strength. Administratively, the regular and reserve battalions will be handled separately.

During the week of July 24, Lieut. Col. Harvey L. Miller, U. S. M. C. R., commanding the local battalion, accompanied by Maj. William W. Stickney, executive officer; Lieut. Comdr. Don S. Knowleton, battalion surgeon, Capt. William J. Burrows, adjutant, and Second Lieut. Paul Schnee, battalion quartermaster, will proceed to Quantico for a conference with regular officers and to arrange a detailed combat training schedule. Most of the 15 days at Quantico will be devoted to combat training, problems and maneuvers.

The battalion, while at Quantico, will be housed under canvas in the usual area overlooking the Potomac.

Lieut. Cogswell, in command of a platoon from Company D, Fifth Battalion, and the Fifth Battalion Band, will participate in the "Night of Thrills" to be held at the Griffith Stadium the latter part of this month.

Capt. Justice M. Chambers, commanding officer, Company C, Fifth Battalion, has received orders to report to active duty June 16 and will be assigned to the school for instructions on special weapons.

There are vacancies in the band and ranks of the battalion for men between the ages of 1" and 35. Those interested in Marine Corps Reserve activities are invited to secure detailed information at 458 Indiana avenue northwest Tuesday or Wednesday between 8 and 10 p. m. Persons residing in Alexandria and Arlington may get full information on Thursday evening at the city armory in Alexandria, and those living near Rockville, Md., may get full information at the courthouse in Rockville Tuesday evenings.

Daughters of America to Initiate New Members

Members of the State and subordinate councils of the Daughters of America will hold class initiation Thursday evening at Northeast Masonic Temple at 8 o'clock.

National Deputy Councilor Mrs. Mabel G. Downing is in charge of the arrangements and drill team. Officers have been picked from the various councils throughout the District, captained by Past State Councilor Mrs. Mildred G. Rock.

Betsy Ross Council's election last week resulted as follows: Deputy State councilor, Lillian M. Martin; judge-councilor, Miss Faye Frazier; associate councilor, Mrs. Russi Canfield; vice councilor, Mrs. Edna Best; associate vice councilor, Ellis Graham; junior past councilor, Marjorie Wine; associate junior past councilor, Mrs. Stella K. Graham; recording secretary, Mrs. Maude A. Winc; assistant recording secretary, Mrs. Ida S. Frazier; financial secretary, Mrs. Ella Treynor; assistant financial secretary, Mrs. Mary Quade; treasurer, Alden K. Wine; conductor, Miss June Graham; warden, Charles H. Whitney; inside sentinel, Miss Catherine Mowbray; outside sentinel, Miss Bertha Estey, and trustee, Mrs. Stella Graham.

Cripples to Hold Own Exercises

Handicapped Pupils To Gather This Week From 'Classrooms' At Their Bedsides

Physically handicapped children—whose "classrooms" have been at their bedsides—will eagerly emerge from their solitary school days to gather for closing exercises Thursday and Friday.

The programs will mark the conclusion of "the first chapter in the history of public education" of Washington's handicapped children, Paul Edwards, District WPA administrator, said.

Exercises Thursday At Dennison

The WPA project, established in 1938 for children who were unable to attend regular schools, has been sponsored by the Board of Education and the District Health Department. The schooling for these children has been under WPA, but has now been put under the wing of the Board of Public Welfare, which will inaugurate the "second phase" in the program next fall.

White pupils who are able to come to the closing exercises will gather at 2 p. m. Thursday in Dennison Vocational School. Allan Lomax, folk song authority, will sing for the children. Dr. Custis Lee Hall, orthopedic specialist, will speak.

About 60 children are expected to take part in the program. Several will be awarded diplomas for completing junior high school courses. Special awards will be made to children with outstanding records. Handicraft, done by the children under WPA teachers, will be exhibited.

672 Children Received Instruction

Colored pupils will hold their exercises at 8 p. m. Friday at Phyllis Wheatley branch of the Y. W. C. A. In a play, "A Day With the Seasons," all parts will be played by pupils in the project. They will take part in a music program also.

Since the project was established 672 children have received instruction—355 in hospitals and 317 in their homes. By receiving education during their enforced absence, 288 of the children were able to return to school with advanced credits.

Teachers serving in the project meet the qualification standards of the Board of Education, it was pointed out, and their classes cover the credit requirements of District public schools.

Defence Question To Be Discussed At Session of National Jr. C. of C.

2,500 Delegates To Arrive Here For Opening Tuesday

America's "rising young men" will plan their futures in the world of tomorrow during convention here this week of the National Junior Chamber of Commerce.

With a program heavily weighted for consideration of defense questions, the organization will begin its twenty-first—coming of age—convention at the Mayflower Hotel Tuesday.

Emphasizing that 2,500 delegates from 48 States and Alaska will be in the National Capital for the seven-day meeting, Minor Hudson, president of the Junior Board of Commerce, stressed the function of the organization in which "young men can gain civic consciousness and make the Nation a better place to live in."

"This convention," he continued, "comes to Washington in the sixth year of existence of the local organization.

Organization Seeks Development of Individuals

"Our national and local groups recognize that building a better Nation depends on development of better individual and component parts of the United States. Consequently, we are essentially an association of local organizations."

High Government officials will unite in discussion of national defense and international problems during the Thursday morning general session.

Army and Navy Chiefs to Speak

Adm. Harold R. Stark, chief of naval operations, will address the convention, during the session. His speech will be carried over a Nation-wide hook-up of the National Broadcasting Co.

Other speakers on the program will be Gen. George C. Marshall, Army chief of staff; Henry Grady, Assistant Secretary of State, and Constantine Brown, columnist for the Washington Evening Star.

Relations between Government and business will be discussed at the Wednesday luncheon by Percy Pipkin, president of the National Junior Chamber of Commerce, and at the Thursday luncheon by James Kemper, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

During the Friday morning session Dr. James Young, director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, will speak on "Interstate Trade Barriers." Charles P. McCormick, president of McCormick & Co., will discuss "Multiple Management," and Carl Zeidler, recently-inaugurated mayor of Milwaukee, also will address the meeting.

An unusual feature of the convention, largest ever held by the national organization, will be its "business building seminars." These small group meetings will be held under the chairmanship of outstanding younger executives and professional men.

The seminars, to be held Thursday afternoon, will cover accounting banking, general insurance, law, life insurance, manufacturing, merchandizing, medicine, printing and publishing, public relations, public utilities and transportation.

Stressing the speed and efficiency with which plans for the convention are nearing completion, A. Z. Foster Wood, general chairman, stated: "The manner in which the junior board has thus far met this tremendous task is a tribute to the caliber of its membership."

"Every aspect of the work to this point," he added, "has been handled with energy and intelligence. There remains only the last big push—convention week itself."

Speakers to Include Admiral H. R. Stark, Gen. G. C. Marshall

Franklin U. Graduates 381, Largest Class

Accountancy Degrees Conferred; Leo Buberl Is Valedictorian

The 381 men and women, who received degrees and certificates in accountancy last night at commencement exercises of Benjamin Franklin University formed the largest graduating class in the 33-year history of the local school.

Leo P. Buberl, of St. Paul, Minn., who stood highest among the 309 who completed the undergraduate course, was valedictorian on the program at the Mayflower Hotel.

Mary A. McEwan, of 125 West Peyton street, Alexandria, the ranking girl graduate, was awarded the gold key which is presented annually by Alpha Chapter of Sigma Phi Omega Sorority.

Faculty members taking part in the program were John T. Kennedy, president; Edwin C. Bosworth, dean; Joseph I. Zucker, of the accounting faculty, and Belford E. Hunsinger, treasurer of the university.

Engraved gold watches were presented by the university to the nine highest members of the class.

The presentation was made by United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage, member of the board of trustees of the university and dean of the law faculty. Recipients of the prizes were: Leo P. Buberl, Charles G. Birckhead, John O. Bosch, Charles B. Chandler, jr., Victor H. Gottschalk, Mary A. McEwan, Alec Alvin Peikin, William R. Schmiech and Lorin E. Wolf.

In addition, 24 others, by reason of general excellence of scholarship, were graduated with honors. The honor graduates, as announced by John B. McGinley, associated director, were: Kenneth Elroy Bickel, William Walter Birckhead, John W. Clear, Marvin A. Cohen, John Aubrey Coram, Pasquale D. DelGrosso, John Thomas Fielder, Morris R. Fitzgerald, Clifford Lester Frank, Wilson Webb Hamill, Paul Sol Harab, Warren Harry Jones, Edward James Kysar, John Warfield Linthicum, Arthur L. McCollum, Julius Philip Mincosky, Bernard Leroy Payne, Duncan Thomas Robinson, Donald Richard Roderick, William Edward Starr, Robert Tabb Stewart, F. Ervin Styles, Perry Winston and Mildred C. Woodcock.

Memberships in the National Association of Cost Accountants were presented to the nine members of the post graduate class with highest standing. They were George Bier, Heber I. Boden, Leonard Cling, George Graves, Gerald Peel, H. T. Smither, Isidore Sodsisky, Nathan Poole and Francis L. Wyche.

Washington College Of Law Announces Board Selection

Mrs. Helena Doocy Reed, assistant trust officer at the Lincoln National Bank and retiring president of the Women's Bar Association of the District of Columbia, has been elected to the board of trustees of the Washington College of Law, it was announced yesterday.

Mrs. Reed was graduated from the college in 1914 with the degree of bachelor of laws. She has been an active member of the Alumni Association, having served as its president for two terms from 1923 to 1927.

The college's summer session will open tomorrow, with the six-week term extending to July 27 and the eight-week session ending on August 10.

Three sorority and fraternity chapters at the college yesterday announced officers elected for the 1940-41 session.

Epsilon Chapter, Kappa Beta Pi Legal Sorority, has chosen Elizabeth E. Salisbury, dean; Lorraine Wall Hurney, associate dean; Carmen McDonald, recording registrar; Mildred Aaberg, corresponding registrar; Ora Smith, chancellor, and Laura J. Thayer, marshal.

Alpha Rho Chapter, Sigma Delta Kappa Legal Fraternity, announces the election of the following: Gale P. Gotschall, chancellor; Edwin A. N. Mooers, vice chancellor; Doyle D. Hagan, treasurer; John J. Dimond, secretary; James W. Clark, bailiff; Erville H. Hagan, alumni advisor; Martin J. Petersilia, auditor; Roland P. Weinert, editor, and Jesse F. McDonald, deacon.

Beta Chapter, Phi Delta Women's Legal Fraternity, has elected Marie Allen president; Margaret Heimiller, vice president and treasurer; Mildred Thissell, secretary; Dorothy Jackson, chaplain, and Alice A. Schlinger, chancellor.

Columbia College Officers Installed

Frances Larson has been installed as president of the Student Assembly of Columbia College of Christian Education, along with these officers: Vice president, Robert Smith; secretary, Bessie Murry; treasurer, Pearl Murany; reporter, Bernice Ouren, and sergeant at arms, William Jacobs.

Legion Honors St. Joseph's Pupils

American Legion awards for the outstanding girl and boy students of St. Joseph's School were presented recently to May Jean Zugel and Eugene Cordes by Gen. U. G. McAlexander, Post No. 38. A Legion school plaque was given the school by the post and its auxiliary.

Anacostia Graduate Scholarship Winner

George Frice Mathieson, an Anacostia High School graduate, has been awarded a scholarship to Benjamin Franklin University, it was announced yesterday by John Paul Collins, principal of the high school.

Mathieson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Mathieson, 1310 W street southeast, ranked second among the 138 members of the graduating class.

Art School Show Opens

Abbot Art School last night opened its annual exhibition which may be seen by the public this week from 2 to 5 p. m. each day.

For closing exercises of the session recently, the junior school produced a version of "Hansel and Gretel" with 22-inch marionettes of the pupils' own design and execution. The witch was made by Margaret Ann Hyatt; Hansel, Betty Bean; Gretel, June Rice; the woodcutter, Elizabeth Banigan; the stepmother, Doris West. The play was read by Joyce Posson, Mary Brombacher and Robert Mettler. Young Mettler was also stage director.

The puppets were made under direction of Helen Klug. The play was supervised by William Baker.

The junior pupils were invited to repeat the performance on a program of the senior school later.

The school's summer session will open June 24, with both indoor and outdoor classes offered for juniors and adults during July and August.

Two District Cadets Graduate at Culver

Two Washington cadets were among 160 seniors just graduated from Culver Military Academy, Culver, Ind. They are Richard F. Perrine, Hotel Commodore, and William M. Trible, 1150 Connecticut avenue.

Robert E. Earll, 5045 Reno road northwest, and Charles Schwartz, 2860 Woodland drive, infantry R. O. T. C. students at Culver, are due to report this month to Fort Knox, Ky., for six weeks' training with R. O. T. C. students from colleges in the Middle West.

Craft Training Center to Conduct Summer Classes

An exhibit of jewelry, weaving, ceramics, metalware and woodworking, just closed at the National Craft Training Center, gave visitors an idea of summer school work beginning there July 1.

The center's first annual exhibition last week emphasized original design. Among original jewelry were rings, bracelets and necklaces fashioned of silver wire which was made in the center from scrap metal. Rings of silver and gold were cast in molds, also made in the shop.

Frederick J. Wallace, director, announces the opening of a six-week summer course July 1, with registrations until then. The curriculum, designed primarily for advanced workers, covers designing and concentration in craft materials, he said.

Three District Girls Receive B. A. Degrees

Three girls from Washington and nearby were among 148 students receiving the Bachelor of Arts degree at recent commencement exercises at Connecticut College, New London, Conn.

They are Ruth C. Rusch, 1408 Montague street northwest, business administration and economics; Anne Stern, 1527 Thirty-third street northwest, sociology, and Alice Mendenhall, of Chevy Chase, Md., fine arts.

Two D. C. Men Get Degrees

B. Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes and Dr. Edwin E. Willoughby, both of Washington, were among the nine men listed for honorary degrees at recent commencement exercises of Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa.

John J. Bunting, jr., of Salisbury, Md., was among five seniors graduated with first honors, in a class of 144. Elizabeth Townsend, of Kensington, Md., an undergraduate was among the new members announced by Alpha Sigma Gamma, honorary journalistic fraternity.

Scholarship Winner

John E. Reynolds, of 3020 Q street northwest, has been awarded a prize scholarship to Harvard University from Phillips Andover Academy, the university announced yesterday.

Strayer Awards Seven Scholarships In High Schools

Seven scholarships for one year's tuition at Strayer College have been awarded honor graduates in senior high schools, it was announced yesterday.

Winners are Constance Ward, Eastern High; Eulaine Humke, McKinley High; Mildred Schlarman, Anacostia High; Mildred Stevenson, Woodrow Wilson High; Gilbert Walker, Western High; Murl Weistling, Roosevelt High, and Frank Smith, Central High.

Winners have the choice of a one-year secretarial course, or the first year of a two-year business administration course, majoring in accounting, which leads to the B. C. S. degree.

Joseph Mahoney, of St. John's, won the one-year scholarship offered by Strayer College for Catholic schools of Washington and vicinity. He made the highest grade in a competitive examination.

To The Parents of a 1940 High School Graduate:

Face the Facts

Your son's success in life depends largely on the decisions YOU make NOW. In this day of specialization and tremendous technical developments, your son's general academic education does not equip him for any particular career. To assure a successful future, he MUST acquire specialized training.

Opportunities in Radio

Unprecedented new developments in Radio such as: new methods of broadcasting, television, facsimile, aviation radio, etc., have created new opportunities and a demand for highly trained men.

One Year Course Prepares

The Capitol Radio Engineering Institute offers an intensive one-year residence course of the highest caliber in Practical Radio and Television Engineering. Over a number of years our graduates have been almost universally successful in obtaining employment in the Radio industry. If your son is technically inclined and has received satisfactory grades in mathematics, English and scientific subjects, we suggest that you investigate the opportunities offered to trained men in the radio industry. May we send you full particulars?

Visit the School

Graduates and parents are invited to inspect the school facilities. Personal appointments gladly arranged at any time. Illustrated catalog given on request.

High School Leaders Face Future With Calm Confidence

Biographies of Valedictorians Show Variety of Interests And Capabilities as Keystone of Success

By Lucia Giddens
Post Educational Editor

Pacemakers of the graduating classes in Washington's senior high schools—with sizeable records already behind them—face the challenging new world of 1940 with a confidence that is being reflected in their valedictory orations at final exercises in the next few days.

These young valedictorians—whose scholarship was the deciding factor in their selection—have, in addition, a well-rounded variety of interests, to open new horizons in the future.

LUCIA GIDDENS

Meet Mary Jean Hayes, for instance. She's valedictorian at Western High School, to climax a busy career there. Her activities have ranged from playing the bass viol in the school orchestra to writing for the school paper and entering into the Chemistry Club.

When asked why she took up the bass viol of all instruments, she explained: "In junior high school, the orchestra had one of them, and there was nobody to play it. So I learned." She plays the piano also.

She made a "straight A" record at Western, has helped in the office, performed in the "Western Night" entertainment and is a member of the Moderns, a literary group. Of course, she belongs to the National Honor Society. Languages are her specialty, and she intends to go to college to pursue them further.

Margaret Lillian Powell, valedictorian at Eastern High School, already has a job as secretary in a lawyer's office. She started on it several days ago, not waiting until she gets her diploma.

She has repeatedly won first honors, semester after semester. She has served on the student council, and has done secretarial work for one of the teachers to practice up for a regular job. She took part in the school's fall show of student talent, in a quiz contest.

Richard Carson, valedictorian at Roosevelt High School, has been captain of cadets, president of the Boys' Glee Club, member of the National Honor Society, and president of the Nature Club. He has a scholarship to the University of Pennsylvania, and he plans to study for a law career.

Henry Silsbee, Woodrow Wilson High School's valedictorian, has been a captain in the cadets, president of both the Science Club and the Mathematics Club, vice president of the Social Studies Club. This year he won the Rensselaer award for the senior with the highest record in science and mathematics.

He plans to attend Harvard University and to become a scientist.

Robert Naiman, of Central High School, is the only valedictorian in the group who was elected by his classmates. He, too, has a fine record. He is a member of the National Honor Society and has served on the student council. He has been sports editor of the school paper and has worked on the student magazine also. He plans to go on to college.

Margaret Adele Duncan, valedictorian at Anacostia Senior High School, has a "straight A" average which, of course, has put her on the first honor roll every year. She was formerly president of the Student Council and is now president of the school bank. She has written for the school newspaper and has participated often in programs for student assemblies. She has competed in oratory and has been an official at the "play day" last year. She has belonged to organizations ranging from the Leaders Club, a sports group, to the Puppet Club. She will enter the University of Maryland, to major in history in the College of Education.

Shirley Dickson will give the valedictory at McKinley High School. In addition to maintaining an "A" record, she has found time to go in for dramatics, to serve as news editor and feature editor (for one semester each) on the school publication, to belong to Quill and Scroll, a writing club. She plans to attend college, to prepare for a teaching career. Languages, especially Latin, are her specialty.

Among the senior schools in Divisions 10-13, Dunbar High School has not one valedictorian, but two. Gladys Pinckney and Harry Lynch had records so high and so similar that a choice could not be made between them, and both will deliver valedictory addresses at the commencement exercises Tuesday night.

Henry has been commanding officer of a cadet regiment and a member of the National Honor Socity. Gladys also belongs to the society and is on the yearbook committee.

At Cardozo High School, Pearl Anna Thomas is valedictorian. She has had a NYA scholarship and has worked as a clerical assistant in the office of the school treasurer. She is this year's winner of the Costin award at Cardozo, as the senior girl outstanding in character and scholarship. This cash award is made possible in the three senior high schools of Divisions 10-13 by funds left in the will of a teacher.

Conrad Paul Edwards, valedictorian at Armstrong High School, has been captain of cadets, member of the National Honor Society and of the football team. He has been active in dramatics and has a leading role in the school pageant, this commencement.

Most of the valedictorians will deliver their orations at graduating exercises in the next few days, but one or two are appearing on the class night programs.

Manor Park Pupils Taught Garden Care

Tour of Community's Cultivated Plots Made by Children

Pupils of Whittier Elementary School have completed a junior garden tour of Manor Park community—which may become an annual event, the principal of the school announced yesterday.

Groups of students, with their teachers, have explored home gardens in the community, and already their sightseeing has begun to show results.

"Early in the Spring the Student Council of Whittier, in discussing how to discourage abuse of community property and lawns by careless children, decided upon the junior garden tour of Manor Park," said Miss Elsie Green, principal.

"The council members carried the idea into their classrooms and their plans were explained at an assembly.

"Many children volunteered to start home gardens or to engage more actively in partnerships with their fathers in an old garden. A large seed order testified to their good intentions."

When the opening of a list of entries was announced, they came from practically all sections of the Manor Park area. The tour required a week to be completed, because of the number of gardens and the numerous groups of pupils whose visits were arranged at intervals.

Classroom discussions, following the visits, have crystalized the children's impressions. The Parent-Teacher Association and the Manor Park Citizens Association have expressed interest in the project, Miss Green said.

"We feel it was a worthwhile project," Miss Green said. "Heretofore the children have planted and cared for their allotted plots in our school garden under classroom teacher supervision. But I feel an added gain has been made in this carry-over into the community.

"Greater appreciation of the amount of money and effort expended in the making of home gardens should lead to greater consideration for other gardens and lawns of the community. The children, at an impressionable age, have had their attention directed to the beauty which a garden setting gives to a home.

"The effect of such a tour has been to increase the number and beauty of gardens in this area, thus enhancing Manor Park community," Miss Green pointed out.

National School Sponsors Exhibit

The annual student exhibition of commercial and fine art at the National Art School will be on view for the remainder of this month, according to an announcement from officials. The public is invited to see it at 1503 Twenty-first street northwest.

Educational Problems to Be Aired During Conference at Catholic U. June 26-27

Dr. Floyd Reeves And Dr. C. H. Judd To Address Group

Dr. Floyd W. Reeves, director of the American Youth Commission, and Dr. Charles H. Judd, director of education for the National Youth Administration, will be among the speakers on educational problems at a conference at the Catholic University June 26 and 27, preceding the opening of the summer session.

The Conference of Diocesan Superintendents of Schools and Secondary School Principals will bring a discussion of "Contemporary Problems in Catholic Education." Speakers at the opening afternoon session June 26 will be Dr. Roy J. Defarrari, chairman of the committee on affiliation and extension at the university; Sister Immaculata, O. S. B., an instructor in the department of education, and the Rev. Dr. George Johnson, head of the department of education and Secretary-General of the National Catholic Education Association.

Dr. Judd will speak on "The Emerging Concept of General Education" at the session following a dinner that evening.

Dr. Reeves will speak on "What the American Youth Commission Has Discovered about the Need of Guidance in American Schools" at the morning session June 27. Sister Ann Cawley, of the university's department of education, will speak on "Guidance in Catholic Schools." Dr. Eugenie Leonard, lecturer in education and a member of the staff of the United States Office of Education, will discuss "Next Steps in Guidance."

DR. GEORGE JOHNSON

Dr. Robert Connery, director of the Commission on American Citizenship, will speak on "The University Program" at the closing session that day. The Rev. Thomas J. Quigley, diocesan superintendent of Catholic schools in Pittsburgh, Pa., will introduce "A Citizenship Program in Catholic High Schools."

Simultaneously with this conference, a symposium on clinical experience in nursing will be held at the university under auspices of the School of Nursing Education.

Sister M. Olivia, the dean of the school; Sister Rita and Dr. Gladys Sellew, of the faculty, will discuss "Administrative Organization" on June 26. Mrs. Eugenia K. Spalding and Sister Bertilla will speak on "Curriculum Development."

Clinical Nursing To Be Symposium Topic at University

Clinical nursing experience in the medical and surgical services will be discussed at the afternoon session that day. "Knowledge, Skills and Attitudes" will be presented by Sister M. Ancieta, Sister Bertilla, Sister M. Maurice and Miss Esther McClain. Sister Lucille, Dr. Sellew and Miss Lucia Sweeton will talk on "The Integration of the Biological and Physical Sciences, Sociology, Psychology and Public Health."

Delegates to the symposium will attend the conference dinner at which Dr. Judd will speak.

Miss Elsie Berdan and Miss Sweeton will give a demonstration of teaching methods at the morning session, June 27. Sister Maurice and Sister Rose will discuss "Evaluation and Records" at the afternoon meeting.

6 D. C. Graduates At Northwestern

Six Washington students were among the 1,925 candidates for degrees in Northwestern University's largest graduating class yesterday in Evanston, Ill.

They are Barbara Ann Beatty, 1852 Columbia road, Bachelor of Science in Education; Joseph Francis Dyer, jr., 1107 O street northwest, Bachelor of Science; Barbara Louise Harris, 2800 Thirty-sixth street northwest, Bachelor of Science in Speech; Dorothy Hoag Spindle, 1437 Rhode Island avenue, Bachelor of Science in Speech; Helen Sturdy, 2105 O street northwest, Bachelor of Science, and Ollo Victor Wallgren, 4000 Cathedral avenue, Bachelor of Science in Industrial Engineering.

Geodetic Survey Chief Gets Degree

Commander Clement L. Garner, chief of the division of geodesy of the U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey, received the honorary degree of Doctor of Engineering at the recent commencement exercises of the University of North Carolina.

Commander Garner, who lives at 3400 McKinley street northwest, is a former resident of North Carolina. Since entering the service of the Survey in 1907, he has had a variety of assignments in the field, on ships operating on both coasts and in the Philippines and on geodetic work in many parts of the United States.

Columbia Tech Bestows Honor On D. C. Employe

Thomas V. Ward, deputy electrical inspector of the District, will be awarded an honorary diploma in electrical engineering at graduation exercises of Columbia Tech Institute at 8:30 p. m. Wednesday, at the Wardman Park.

He graduated from the electrical engineering department in 1934 and will receive the honorary award for "outstanding achievement."

Fred G. Stephenson, of the advanced elelectrical engineering class, will be valedictorian of the class. He will be awarded the school's gold pin in recognition of that honor.

Paul J. Leverone, principal, announced the class of 250 is the largest in the 30-year history of the institute.

D. C. Alumnae Chapter Plans Buffet Supper

District Girls Now At Randolph Macon College to Be Feted

The Washington chapter of Randolph Macon Woman's College alumnae will honor local girls now in school there and future students, at a buffet supper this evening in the garden of Miss Marion Magruder in Arlington, Va. Mrs. Edward Sheffey is president of the chapter.

Among the girls to be honored are two who have recently been chosen for college offices. Miss Mary Byrd Shearer, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. P. Shearer, 3024 Forty-fourth street northwest, has been elected recording secretary of Kappa Alpha Theta Sorority. Miss Rosman Taylor, daughter of Mrs. Philip F. Taylor, 236 Farragut street northwest, has been chosen fashion editor of the college humor magazine, the Old Maid.

NewEngland Now Picture In Laurel

Old Villages, Beautified by Great Trees, Fine Gardens

By Katherine B. Pozer.

With the coming of warm weather, the interest of many roving gardeners centers around New England, where lovely old villages and their quaint old houses have picture settings of fine gardens and great trees for which the section is famous.

New Englanders have always respected their trees and have taken spendid care of them. Besides preserving its trees, New England has been most progressive in its roadside development and conservation work. The roadsides are particularly lovely where native planting has been preserved. Much additional planting has also been done by garden clubs and civic groups.

June is particularly lovely in this northern section of our country. It is blooming time for the laurel. An educational campaign has been waged for years to preserve the laurel with the result that there are great stretches and fields reserved for its protection. The farmers have learned to appreciate the value of their "laurel pastures" and many of these privately owned preserves have 25 or more acres.

Lilacs Abound In New England

Lilacs abound in New England. The first planting in America is said to be that which was planted in the garden of the Gov. Benning Wentworth estate. New Hampshire has adopted the lilac as its State flower and has planted it extensively along the roadsides. The State Federation of Garden Clubs has established a lilac arboretum at the New Hampshire University at Durham. In Maine the clubs have concentrated also on the planting of lilac. The 54 State clubs have established a lilac friendship hedge, with the idea of taking the slips and sending them to all sections of the State. Their slogan is "Dividends of Happiness From the Friendship Hedge."

This week will find hundreds of America's leading garden experts in New England when the National Council of Garden Clubs holds the annual meeting in Portsmouth, N. H. Visits are planned to famous old houses and to interesting horticultural centers and places where conservation and roadside projects have been completed.

In Portsmouth the experts will visit three homes of famous seafaring men. One of these is the house where Paul Jones lived while he was outfitting the Ranger and the American. Built in 1758, it is now the home of the Portsmouth Historical Society. Another is the home of Capt. John Moffatt, who commanded the American ships which crossed the Atlantic loaded with fine American timbers for England's ships. Another spot of interest will be the old brick house built in 1716 by a Capt. Mar Phedric, which still has an old lightning rod, one of those installed under the direction of Benjamin Franklin.

Many members plan to go into Maine where Mrs. Barrow, wife of the Governor, has invited them to visit her garden and to see the Friendship Lilac Hedge. Mrs. Barrow is a very active member of the Kennebec Valley Garden Club and is chairman of the No. 1 garden center, which was established last year. Gov. George Aiken, Vermont's Governor, who is a noted horticulturist, will address the members of the council at Mrs. Barrow's garden party, on "Making Wild Things Grow." Later they will visit the Henry Wadsworth Longfellow garden in Portland, where the Longfellow Garden Club owns and cares for the charming small garden planted in 1785 by the poet's maternal grandfather.

Stress Importance Of Floral Artistry

The national council with its member clubs in every State and a membership of several hundred thousand exerts a very wide influence in every section of the country. They have set forth educational campaigns on conservation and roadside development, with particular attention to roadside buildings and signs. They have a system of awards for roadside stands which meet the council requirements for cleanliness and attractive appearance. Members are asked to patronize these stands. In the education of juveniles in horticulture and the value of conservation of wild life they have been particularly active with programs in the schools and garden centers, these centers are also an important feature of State and national work.

While interested in these many vital questions which concern the welfare and beauty of the land they have not overlooked the value of horticultural perfection and stress the importance of artistry in the use of flowers and growing material in both the garden and in the home. A feature of the meeting will be a flower show in which there will be one exhibit made by an arranger from each State. On Tuesday afternoon Mrs. Roy Lincoln, of Port Washington, Long Island, will give a lecture on "The Personal Equation in Flower Arrangement." Mrs. Lincoln recently gave one of the first "one-woman" shows in the rotunda of the New York Fair. These shows will be continued through the year, when exhibits and talks will be given by outstanding flower arrangement experts.

Another lecture on arrangements will be given by Miss Hazel Heissenbuttel, of New York, when she will speak to the council members on "Table Decorations, Emphasizing Color Harmony."

Herbs will be another featured subject of the council meeting. There will be an herb luncheon followed by talks on herbs and their uses. The subjects covered will be "Culinary Herbs," "Medicinal Herbs," "Commercial Herbs" and "The Herb Garden." There will be an exhibit of dried and fresh herbs and of old books and journals with articles and prints.

June Roses, Delphiniums, Lilies Require Deep Digging to Flourish

By Crowell Baynes

WHILE the full flush of the June rose display lingers, the beauty of the garden is further enhanced with three other aristocrats —the delphinium, the Regal lily, and the peach-leaved bellflower. Most gardens have some roses and many have one or two of the trio, but few have all three. But they make a quartet worth working for—and it takes both work and intelligent attention to their needs to have all four in bloom together in June.

Each is different and distinctive—but the first three have one important point in common. Each does its best only when it is planted in soil where its roots can run freely and where there is a nice adjustment of the moisture supply and the air supply about its roots. This calls for the kind of deep digging recommended repeatedly in these articles.

For fine roses, delphiniums, and Regal lilies, it can not be emphasized too strongly that digging to a single spade length is not enough. Digging two full spade lengths deep and fitting the soil to the needs of the individual species is the minimum for really getting the most out of these splendid plants.

The peachleaved bellflower will do well in good soil 12 inches deep, but will do still better in deeper soil.

Roses, with few exceptions, thrive best in fairly heavy clay soils, and many gardeners dodge the labor of good preparation probably on the theory that the subsoil hereabouts is often about the same kind of clay as the surface soil, and that if roses can grow in clay upper soil they can make their way in the subsoil. Some of the bush roses and climbers seem to do very well when treated in this way, but the aristocratic hybrid teas do not.

Hybrids Require Deep Digging

Deep digging for hybrid teas is primarily a matter of insuring drainage and aereation for the roots. Most of the roots it is true, will remain in the upper foot of soil. Most good gardeners top dress and fertilize their roses in spring give them a rest after the first flush, and then resume tonic feedings as soon as the roses revive in late July or August. They encourage growth of feeding roots in the upper foot, and frankly coddle their plants with special attention to watering and feeding.

The tendency in this sort of care in a suitably heavy clay soil is to keep the soil so moist that it is becomes almost waterlegged with air getting to the roots only occasionally. The result, only too frequently, is the development of root rots and fungus attacks and troubles with insects. This accounts for many of the frequent complaints that the good hybrid teas are short-lived and die out and have to be replaced.

Many of rose aristocrats are not long lived at best, but they will live longer and will do much better while they live if the roots are kept thoroughly healthy in a well drained and well aired bed which results from deep digging and conditioning of the subsoil so that water applied at the surface will be sucked deep, drawing air after it, and then will be fed back to the plants as they require the moisutre.

For delphiniums, the soil must be much lighter, and must be throughly conditioned with an abundance of good quality humus. The soil need not be overly rich but it must be well-drained —exceptionally so.

To make a good delphinium soil from our prevailing clays is likely to call for the addition of a 3- or 4-inch layer of sand or sifted ashes and a 5- or 6-inch layer of compost, leaves, or manure. When this is mixed in with the soil in a bed it will raise the surface nearly a foot after double-digging, and from the standpoint of the delphiniums, the added height above the general surface is all to the good. It makes the drainage so much the better. One of the best delphinium growers in Washington grows his prize flowers exclusively in raised beds, some with the soil held in place by loose-laid rock walls and others with simple plank supports.

D. C. Weather Bad For Delphiniums

Washington is definitely too hot in summer and too moist in winter for easy culture of delphiniums. Delphinium fans find it worth the trouble to provide the extra care that will promote fine bloom. In this climate delphiniums also need considerable shade from the hottest midday sun. Placed far enough to the north of a house or distant tree so that they will be shaded from 10 in the morning to 2 in the afternoon they will come through hot weather in better condition than in full sun. But they will not endure damp crowns in winter, nor drought in summer. They need deep digging for drainage and a plentiful supply of moisture insured by plenty of humus dug into the soil in preparation for the feeding roots that demand the moisture that would be deadly near the crown.

For the Regal lily, the mere mechanics of planting ought to be a guide to the gardener and to dictate deep digging. Planting depth for the bulb is 10 to 12 inches below the surface. There are some roots that form on the stem as it develops in spring, but the main feeding roots spring from the base of the bulb, and these gather most of the plant food that renews the bulbs and builds the offsets from which the stock multiplies.

The Regal lily is a remarkably obliging aristocrat in the garden. It will do as well as it may even when the subsoil is hard and impenetrable so that it merely spreads its roots along horizontally at the bottom of the spaded soil. But it can do its best only when it can feed wide and deep. It will root the full depth of two spade length if it has the chance, and the added depth is not only an aid to the feeding, but also to the safety of the bulb.

In winter there is a tendency for moisture to follow down the matured stock and to follow along horizontal roots with the result that the Regal bulb is likely to be in a watersoaked spot, although it should be fairly dry for good health. Planting in a pocket of sand in deeply spaded soil allows the water to drain away from the bulb as is desirable.

Most lilies call for similar treatment—deep soil for drainage and deep rooting, and abundant humus to lighten the soil and promote both drainage and moisture supply as well as aereation. Freshly decaying manure or compost is likely to cause bulbs to decay too.

These aristocrats practically demand the extra care in preparation on which they thrive. Nearly all the good perennials thrive in beds that have the same attention, that provide drainage, aereation, moisture and fertility. Gardens prepared this way are too rich and friendly for nasturtiums, petunias and a few other plants that thrive on a lean diet, and run to foliage instead of flowers when fed too well. But mid-June is not too early to begin making plans for thorough autumn preparation that is required if next June is to bring a splendid display of roses, delphiniums, lilies and peachbells.

Cultivation Vital in Hot Weather

Gardener Must Create Dust Mulch To Preserve Soil's Moisture

Hot weather calls for special treatment in the garden. It is then that the skill of the gardener counts. So long as the rains are plentiful and nights cool, but not too cool, flowers and vegetables will go ahead with very little assistance, but in hot weather troubles multiply.

Growth slows up and insect attacks grow worse. Even if rains continue hot weather is always dry, because the heat evaporates an enormous amount of water. Cultivation becomes vital, not only to cut down the weeds which are competing with the crops for subterranean water and food, but to create a dust mulch, which will prevent evaporation from the surface of the soil and conserve moisture for the plants.

It is now that the application of plant food becomes important for stimulating the growth of plants which otherwise would be inclined to sulk. Insect attacks should be dealt with upon their first appearance, since the warm weather not only increases the number of the insects but diminishes the resistance of the plants.

Where a garden can be irrigated the complaint is often heard that water does not seem to do much good, and the reason usually given is that the water is cold. But if the water is applied in a spray which is broken up into fine particles it is warmed by the air sufficiently to overcome the objection. It is probable that the reason for disappointment in irrigation, as a rule, is not cold water but insufficent water.

The extent of evaporation during hot weather calls for an extraordinary amount of water to balance the supply available for the plants. The amount possible to apply by the ordinary garden hose is insufficient and is made less effective when sprayed through the air. It is advisable, then, that even with cold water, if the amount that can be used is limited, it be allowed to run in shallow trenches or applied directly to the soil rather than sprayed.

Instead of trying to water the entire garden on the same day, or evening, concentrate on one portion, and give it a thorough soaking, at least a foot down. Next day, try another part. Such soaking should last a week, and the water will not be cold very long.

In the tool kit of the home gardener there are implements for various purposes just as in the golfer's bag there are clubs for varying distances. Of the gardener, as of the golfer, it may be said that his closeup work is the most important.

Good performance with the hoe and the rake is as common as fairly long drives on the fairway; but the master gardener is stamped by the skill of his trowel, as the golfing expert is supreme in mashie prowess.

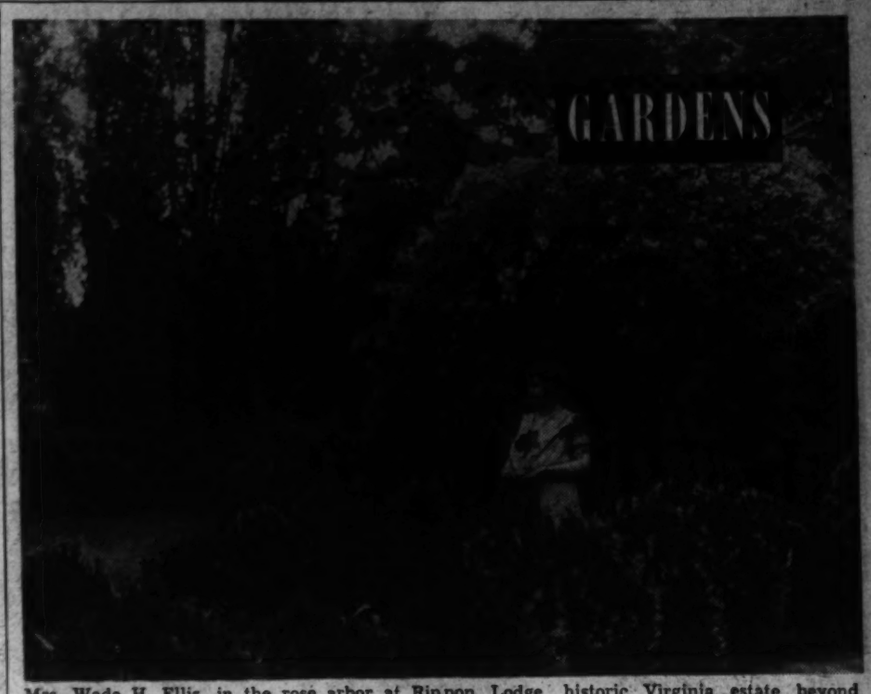
The trowel unquestionably is the most treasured tool of what may be termed a "dirt gardener"—that is, one who knows and loves the feel of soil, rather than being content with planning, directing and discussing garden operations. The trowel serves many purposes. Most important, perhaps, is the use in transplanting. Fully half the average vegetable garden, and more than half in the case of flowers, is composed of plants that have been moved from the place they started with the assistance of a trowel.

The trowel takes a gardener down on his or her knees; it makes him familiar with the things he grows and the soil they grow in; it is useful in the important job of thinning out and in the finer points of cultivating; it is a tool that a gardener always wants nearby, and it should be a good one. Nothing is more useless than a trowel of poor material, which will bend or break at the very time strength is most needed. The expense of a heavy one of steel may be spread over many years of faithful service.

The hoe stands second in importance. Some gardeners have many of different shapes—square, pointed, rounded, etc. These are good, though an ordinary hoe will serve all purposes fairly well. The hoe cuts down weeds and stirs the top soil, leaving a dust mulch to conserve moisture. A wheel hoe in the garden of fair size will save time for cultivating between rows.

A pronged hand hoe in the small garden is as fast as the wheel type. It consists of three to five cultivator teeth attached to a handle. It may be used in irregular plantings where a wheel hoe would be useless.

A rake for smoothing the surface of the garden is necessary. Those who wish may obtain special tools for every operation, including seed and fertilizer spreaders. A spraying device is needed in every garden.



Mrs. Wade H. Ellis, in the rose arbor at Rippon Lodge, historic Virginia estate beyond Mount Vernon, where she and Mr. Ellis frequently entertain in the summer. The garden is now at its prime, with a profusion of climbing roses, and honeysuckle in full bloom. It has the charm of age—old boxwood hedges, great trees, including a weeping willow overhanging a lily pond and a natural woodland as a background. George Washington was a frequent visitor at Rippon Lodge. On the place are bushes planted at the time of the "Boston Tea Party" in an effort to find something to be used as a substitute for tea.

Funkia, the Day Lily, Makes Fine Border; A Heavy Feeder, It Requires Enriched Soil

By Alfred Putz.

The name funkia has become so well established in the minds of many gardeners that not a few will be surprised to learn that the correct botanical name is hosta. Some may wonder how it can happen that one and the same plant may be known by more than one scientific name. Such occurrences are quite frequent and may be due to several causes. Once a new plant is discovered it falls to the lot of the scientist who found it to give it a name. If the plant represents a new genus, a generic as well as a species name is chosen by the original investigator.

Thus funkia was named in honor of Henry Funk, a botanist. As in olden days, the knowledge of plant discoveries traveled slowly, it was not unusual for some other plant hunter to have come across the identical plant and applied his own name to it. Once the facts became known about the two names, research had to be made to find out which name had priority, as priority governs the name selection. Sometimes, too, early botanists erred in assigning new species to the correct genus. These mistakes called for later revisions in the names.

To the home gardener to whom the scientific names are more or less meaningless, these plants are known as day lilies, plantain lilies or August lilies. They are favorite hardy perennials from China and Japan, first introduced toward the end of the eighteenth century. They belong to the lily family, and at a glance their blooms will quickly reveal indisputable similarity. They are closely related to hemerocallis, popularly known as yellow day lilies. The name day lily refers to the fact that the blooms last only a day, or perhaps it would be better to say one night, because they open in the evening and last until the following forenoon. To enjoy the flowers plant them where they will be shaded until noon, as under such conditions the blooms will retain their fresh apearance much longer into the day.

Popularity Owing To Neat Appearance

Their popularity is owing largely to their neat appearance when used as a border. They form at thick clump of attractive foliage which warrants their universal use even if no flowers were produced. Planted in rows along the edge of beds or walks, they require very little attention, as weeds find it difficult to secure a foothold among them. They have a massive, fibrous root system which draws heavily on the soil fertility, and when supplied abundantly with food will develop into large specimens of imposing appearance. Even in poor soil they will persist year after year without signs of decay. With the first winter frost the foliage will collapse, and it is well to remove it promptly, as its decay while resting on the crown of the plant is contrary to proper garden sanitation.

Because they are heavy feeders the soil should be prepared deeply and well enriched with well rotted manure, or a combination of a complete plant food and humus such as leafmold, peatmoss or commercial humus. The plants like a soil that retains moisture, and thrive better if planted near water.

When an established planting becomes too crowded to favor further strong development, the time for dividing and transplanting has arrived. Either in the autumn after the foliage has been touched by frost, or early in the spring, dig up the clumps and cut them into several fair-sized sections, each with an abundance of roots and several growing tops or crowns. Replant these promptly after improving the soil by the addition of old manure or fertilizer. Should dry weather prevail, give several good soakings with the hose to settle the soil around the roots. The experimentally inclined gardener also may increase his planting by sowing the black, flat seeds contained in the large seedpods that form here and there. Sow promptly in the open ground when the pod is about ready to split.

There are several fine species to choose from. The one with the largest flowers is plantaginea grandiflora. Most plantsmen list this as funkia subcardata grandiflora. Under favorable conditions this will make imposing clumps more suited to specimen display than to borders. When in bloom the plants stand 2½ to 3 feet high, with pure white, lily-shaped flowers measuring 4 to 6 inches in length above a mass of large, slightly heart-shaped leaves of a bright green color. Fine specimens of this plant may be observed in old yards where they have had no disturbance for years. The exquisite orange-like fragrance of the blooms is a special attraction. Devoid of flowering spikes, the foliage itself grows up to 20 inches tall, and makes a clump three feet across. This species is known widely by the popular name of big plantain lily. It blooms in August and September.

A Favorite Edging Plant

Next in popularity is the species offered as undulata media picta. This is a favorite edging plant producing great masses of small, wavy leaves combining a bright shade of green with a prominent white edge. It bears pale purple flowers during July. Those who are primarily interested in this as an edging plant often remove the flower stems as soon as they develop to throw the strength of the plant into the foliage alone. Hosta lancifolia also is found abundanty throughout old gardens. It has fairly narrow, pointed leaves measuring about six inches in length and two inches across their widest part. Each flower spike carries a total of from 6 to 10 blooms which open on successive days. The pale lilac blooms are about 1½ inches long.

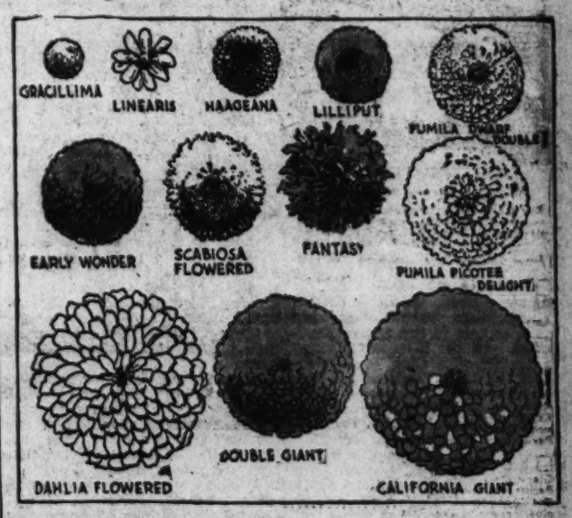
The species, distinguished by the grayish green color of its leaves, is Sieboldiana, also known as glauca. Except for the beautiful metallic sheen of its leaves the plant looks much like the big plantain lily. It has the same vigor, but the white flowers borne in July are not so large, nor are they carried above the foliage.

Caerulea also is common in old gardens. It is called the blue plantain lily, with bright green leaves, half as wide as they are long and inclined to be somewhat pear-shaped at the base. The flowers differ from the other species mentioned in that they have a distinct narrow tube that opens up, when half the length of the flower has been reached, into a distinct bell shape.

Lancifolia, the smallest one, with narrow leaves, makes clumps six inches tall and bears pale lilac flowers from mid-July until late August. Its neat habit recommends it for bordering beds. A variety of this with white-margined leaves is named lancifolia albo-marginata, while lancifolia variegata has leaves much variegated with creamy white.

One may enjoy the beauty of the blooms to the fullest by cutting them early in the morning and placing them in water indoors where only subdued light will reach them.

Ease of Growing Contributes To Popularity of Zinnias



A Tropical Plant, It Germinates Quickly in Hot Weather and Produces An Abundance of Blooms Until Frost

Zinnias are the most popular flowers in America. In making their way to this eminence they have overtaken sweet peas, asters and petunias, which still are popular to be sure, but are trailing zinnias in the race.

The merit which contributes most to the zinnia's success is probably the ease with which it is grown. A tropical plant, which endures the hottest weather, it is the beginner's ideal flower, germinating quickly in warm weather, growing rapidly to flowering size, and then producing blossoms abundantly until frost kills it.

Late planted zinnias are best sown where they are to remain to avoid the check of transplanting. Plant three or four seeds to a hill, hills 2½ feet apart for the large flowering types and 18 inches for the dwarf sorts, then thin to a single plant. They will make rapid growth, especially if encouraged with a complete plant food.

To encourage large flowers, apply a teaspoonful of plant food around each plant after buds appear. Stir it into the soil, taking care not to allow it to touch stems or foliage. If it should get on the foliage, brush or wash off.

Zinnias have shown remarkable ability to improve in size and color, under the encouragement of plant breeders. Their color range is one of the largest, including nearly all the spectrum except real blues. In size they range from the tiny graycillima or cupid type, through many intermediate sizes to the dahlia flowered and California giant classes, which can be grown to a diameter of six inches. And they have been bred into a remarkable variety of forms.

Small flowered zinnias are in some ways better border flowers than the giant flowered classes; they produce more flowers, held above the foliage, on bushy plants, and their variety of forms make interesting texture effects.

The shaggy fantasy type, and the scabiosa flowered zinnias make pleasing cut flower arrangements, while the small flowered singles are excellent for low bowl bouquets. All zinnias take about the same culture, and all show remarkable ability to withstand rough treatment, while responding generously to good care. Progress has been made in breeding the various strains true to type, and developing more brilliant colors.

Mexican Highway Rules Simplified

Mexico City, D. F.

American motorists planning a summer jaunt to Mexico will find the highways marked with signs in English to simplify an observance of the highway regulations. Speed limits are being posted in kilometers and in miles, the latter especially for the benefit of American automobilists. Although Mexican highways record fewer accidents per mile traveled than almost any roads in the world, Mexico's highway officials are constantly striving to reduce fatalities. Violation of speed limits will mean a fine of 1,000 pesos.

Garden Club of Virginia Is Completing Plans for Lily Show at Fredericksburg

Preparations for the fourth annual Lily Show of the Garden Club of Virginia, which will be held this week at Seacobeck Hall, Mary Washington College, Fredericksburg, Va., are practically completed.

One of the outstanding features of the show will be the planted flower border of lilies grouped with blooming summer flowers. The lilies are to be contributed from the Oregon lily farms of Edgar L. Kline, whose interest and cooperation have made possible such an unusual display and one which is unique in amateur shows in this section.

The border will be 28 feet long, 3 feet wide, with a background of clipped cedar hedge, and a low edging border of box bushes. It will be constructed under the supervision of Mrs. W. Brown Morton and Mrs. Eugene Cornwell, of the Rappahannock Valley Garden Club.

In addition to this garden there will be a section devoted to collections of lilies not in competition, contributed from different sections of the country by well-known lily growers, notably, Mrs. Mortimer Fox, at Peekskill, N. Y.

With the exception of the medal of the American Horticultural Society and the usual silver cups given by the Garden Club of Virginia, and some individual members, all the prizes offered are designed to develop and promote interest in lilies and their culture.

Mrs. John Hayes, president of the Garden Club of Virginia, is offering the latest and most up-to-date books on lily culture . . . "Lilies," by Woodcock and Coutts; "Garden Cinderellas," by Mrs. Mortimer Fox; "Lilies for American Gardens," by George L. Slate, and the Lily Year Books of the American Horticultural Society, while the lily committee of the Garden Club of Virginia offers lily bulbs in the remaining classes.

The judges for the show will be Mrs. Duncan Brent, Mrs. John Cates, Mrs. Bladen Lowndes, Mrs. Dushane Penniman, Mrs. Thomas Murrell, Mrs. Louis Scott, Mrs. Lomax Tayloe, Mrs. O. W. Dudley, Mrs. R. Lee Boatwright, jr., Mr. B. Y. Morrison, president of the American Horticultural Society, Mr. Roy G. Pierce and Mr. Edwin Powell.

Schedules may be obtained from Mrs. J. Minor Holloway, Fredericksburg, Va., and all lily growers are cordially invited to exhibit.

Lily specimen classes include single specimens and collections of at least three varieties in the up-turned cup class, the Easter Lily or trumpet class, the Martagon or Turk's cap type and there will be a class for orange lilies, any type, one stalk each, to be shown in separate containers and a specimen of any hybrid lily.

In the lily arrangement classes there will be Umbellatum or elegans lilies in combination with hermocallis and any foliage to be shown in a low wide container. Arrangement using one or two lily stalks only, any color, in combination with any flowers or foliage, stressing airiness of composition. To be shown in clear glass 6-inche containers. (Containers furnished.) White lilies, using bold foliage. Shown in dark containers. Orange or red lilies in combination with brilliant colors, producing Oriental color effects. To be shown in similar copper colored containers against a metallic background. (Containers and background furnished.

There will be other classes for summer flowers, delphiniums, roses, hermocallis and wild flowers and a number of arrangement classes. There will be an exhibit from the nearby wild flower preserve in the Battlefield Park.

The show will be open two days, Thursday from 2:30 to 9 p. m., and Friday from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m.

Gardeners' Calendar

For week beginning June 16, 1940.

In a late season, June is the time to keep the hoe and trowel in action against weeds so that the beds will be ready for anti-weed mulching in July.

Don't start "sprinkling" of flower beds, forcing roots to form near the surface. Half as much water supplied with a flowing hose that soaks the beds once a week will promote deep rooting and sturdier growth.

When delphinium spikes fade, cut them back and prevent seeding, but save the foliage at the base of the flowering stalk. Many plants will bloom again in fall if seeding is prevented now.

Take good care of tulips this season and allow them to ripen in the beds, keeping them well watered until the foliage browns. There will be few tulips for replacements this fall.

Long flowering stalks of peonies may be cut back to the general outline of the foliage, but hard pruning will restrict next year's bloom.

The closely barbered lawn is likely to acquire a dandruff of crabgrass. But set the mower high, even if it means more frequent mowing.

Plant pansy seed now for stock to set in bed this fall.

There is still time for a planting or two of gladiolus and for addition of a few choice dahlias.

Many perennial seeds may now be planted in flats or seed pans where they can be nursed through summer heat. Or plant in a cold frame and provide slat shade.

Argentina Begins Brilliant Season

Now that its winter down in South America, Brazil and Argentina, the two great countries of the east coast, are preparing for their gayest and most brilliant season.

"Today most people realize that the seasons of South America are just the reverse of those in the United States," declares L. E. Archer, passenger traffic manager of the American Republics Line, which is featuring a series of regular cruises to Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires, Montevideo and other Latin-America.. ports. "Few stop to think, however, that winter is the time of the best plays, of music and of the social season in every land. On this account Americans visiting South America during the next few months may witness some of its finest and most interesting spectacles."

Canada's Overnight Provinces Offer Attractio ns For Ideal Vacation and Taste of World Drama

Tour From Toronto Reveals Merger Of the Old and New

By Celeste Weyl.

North of the border the "Overnight Provinces" of Canada have all the attractions for an ideal vacation, and at the same time give the traveler the feeling that he is experiencing a part in the drama of the world today. Tourist traffic flows as freely and comfortably as during peace time.

A tour of Canada from Toronto to Quebec inculding the Saguenay River or the Gaspe Peninsula reveals history, scenic beauty, and undreamed of contrasts in the merging of the old and the new. Ancient France is alive on our continent with something more tangible than memories. Old-world charm and antiquity live in the Province of Quebec for those who follow the trail to the North.

From Buffalo and Niagara Falls you may go either by train, car or steamer to Toronto, capital of Ontario, about 500 miles from Washington, D. C. Known as "The Queen City" of Canada, it is one of the most popular points of entry to a vast lakeland and forest playground. Toronto, with a population of 850,000, has 10 miles of lake front, and eastward and westward are endless stretches of fine beaches. Sailing and canoeing, both lake and heated outdoor pool swimming, and many golf, tennis and lawn clubs make it a popular vacation spot.

A French chateau transplanted to the New World, Casa Loma now welcomes visitors under the sponsorship of the Kiwanis Club. On St. Clair avenue you will see the Granite Club, which is the nursery, if not the birthplace, of figure-skating, a sport achieving a new high in popularity since Hollywood became conscious of Sonja Heine and her art. Most of the artists spotlighting at the ice carnivals from coast to coast began carving their careers on the rink of this famous club when mere children.

About 225 miles north on a well-paved road is Callander, which has been a magnet for thousands of travelers since May 28, 1934, when the quintuplets dropped anchor. Don't miss seeing the five Dionne youngsters who awakened the sleepy little village on Lake Nipissing, now known the world over.

Peace Tower of 53 Bells at Ottawa

On to Ottawa, capital of the Dominion, where the carillon of 53 bells tolls from the belfry of the impressive Peace Tower . . . Parliament Hill against a backdrop of the age-old Laurentians overlooks the river . . . at sunset roof and gable, spire and steeple of the Houses of Parliament are a vision of beauty. Opposite the east entrance stands the Chateau Laurier, one of the most luxurious hotels on the continent. Following the winding of the river along Rideau Driveway, you come to Rideau Hall, the residence of Canada's Governor-General. Just across the Ottawa is the Quebec city of Hull, your introduction to French Canada.

The history of Canada's capital is closely interwoven with that of the river on whose banks it is situated. First explored by Champlain in 1613 when he marveled at its seething waterfalls, the Ottawa became the fur-trade route to the west and the north, and for a century and a half saw only the picturesque coureurs des bois or swarthy Indians transporting their furs to Montreal.

In 1837, Queen Victoria chose Ottawa as the capital of her Dominion across the Atlantic. A prosperous and important world capital emerged from the struggling Bytown, originally named after the Empire builder, Col. John By, of the Royal Engineers.

The lucky visitor who can wangle an invitation or guest card from a member will enjoy dining and dancing at the exclusive Seigniory Club about 30 miles south of the capital along the Ottawa River. The club is the direct descendant of authentic old Canada. One of the earliest French seigniories, the luxurious main building is modern, but only a few hundred yards away overlooking the river stands the original manorial mansion. A massive stone wall guards a seventeenth century chateau; its old tower is constructed with a winding stairway and lookouts for defense firing on the Indians. The club house of logs and stone forms a huge cross with four long wings, each three stories high, containing sleeping rooms, ballroom, and dining salon. The center of the building is one huge octagonal room with a balcony opening toward the wings. A great stone chimney with eight open fireplaces dominates this hospitable room which serves as the lounge and entrance. Many of the members have their own cottages built on the ridge overlooking the clubhouse and the river. Some of these cottages made from local stone or timber cost from twenty to a hundred thousand dollars, and probably have no less than 20 rooms. The club grounds extending thousands of acres along the river and for miles into the forest are used for hunting and fishing.

Musical Ride Of Royal Dragoons

If you are in Canada at horse show time, don't miss the "Musical Ride" of the Royal Dragoons. Thirty-two riders, in brilliant uniforms and brass helmets, and their horses canter to a single tune; in reality, a folk dance on horseback, but a bit more spirited.

From Ottawa you enter the Laurentian Mountain region of waterfalls, lakes, and excellent fishing. Here distances are short . . . Montreal is only 120 miles from Ottawa, and 250 miles from Toronto, less than a day's trip.

The St. Lawrence, the great flowing highway of pioneer Canada and New France knew the ships, canoes, and bateaux of fur traders and colonists. Piracy and raids were frequent during the War of 1812-14, the Rebellion of '37, and the Fenian Raid of '66, and are written into the history of the Thousand Islands.

A sail through the channels of the islands is tops for unrivaled scenery.

Islands to Montreal where a touch of Paris comes to life in Canada's metropolis. It is the second largest French-speaking city in the world with a population of more than a million; 60 per cent of its people are French. The charter of Montreal dates back to 1642 when Paul Chomedy de Maisonneuve on his arrival from France took possession of the island of Montreal. On Mount Royal the rustic cross he planted is but a shadow of the huge illuminated cross visible for many miles today. Modernism has not disrupted the tranquility and charm of this beautiful park. Since no motor cars are allowed, here is your chance to turn back the pages to another century and see Mount Royal in a horse-drawn carriage.

Either by land or sea the journey from Montreal to Quebec is like traveling along the road to yesterday. While Montreal still clings to its old-world customs, it keeps a keen eye on the calendar, but Quebec shows little reaction to a streamlined era.

Jacques Cartier, in 1534, sailed up and quite by accident discovered the St. Lawrence while looking for a short-cut to the Pacific Ocean and the fabulous treasures of Cathay. The disappointed sailor of St. Malo returned to France with tales of the new land and the great river. Nearly a century later, in 1608, Champlain set off for the New World, and with his colonists built a fort at Quebec, the cradle of New France.

Near Quebec the shrine of Ste. Anne de Beaupre attracts thousands of pilgrims annually.

Far Cry From Huts Of Early Settlers

The Chateau Frontenac is a far cry from the huts of the early settlers. The residence of the French governors and the cannons atop the walls of Upper Town are reminders of the struggles of the French and English for the famous fortress, the Gibraltar of America. The citadel represents in almost perfect preservation a system of defense centuries old.

Below in Lower Town take a caleche for an hour or two and explore the quaint nooks and crannies of an old-world city. Native to Quebec, this unique vehicle is neither Irish jaunting cart nor hansom cab. With its narrow-winding cobblestone streets, this section is a reproduction of ancient France. The capital of Canada in an earlier day, Quebec is the only walled city in North America. For foreign atmosphere it has few rivals on this continent.

The Province of Quebec is as French as France itself. It offers the most varied transportation in the world. On the highways speed motor cars, a dog hauls a milk-cart down a bypath, oxen saunter along drawing their loads, air-minded travelers arrive at the airports, steamers and river barges sail down the St. Lawrence, and yachts cruise the inland waterways.

You still see the little Norman steeped-roof houses, the outdoor ovens and the two-wheeled ox-carts as they were used by the early settlers. The charm of Quebec is not only that of stone and granite, but of the customs of its colorful people and their indifference to a changing world. Quebec is slow to "ring out the old."

Not far from the capital of the Province, the Isle of Orleans lives in the past—women plying their looms and spinning wheels; farmers sowing by hand and reaping with the scythe. No English is spoken.

With the rate of exchange so decidedly in your favor, you can indulge in those long-dreamed of luxuries that make a vacation worth remembering. Choose a lakeland, seaside or mountain resort; visit historic cities or the wild, remote country. Whatever your plans may be, Canada is an ideal holiday land.

Just below Quebec on the mighty St. Lawrence lies the beautiful pastoral Isle of Orleans which visitors, enchanted by its French traditions and picturesque, unchanging customs, have called "the most romantic spot in Canada."

Today this lovely island is connected with the mainland by a great steel bridge. But this bridge dates only from 1935. For centuries it has been a long, gem-like strip in the St. Lawrence with but a tiny ferry in summer and an ice bridge in winter for contact with the neighboring shores.

Isolated this way, the people have lived in the past. Even now little has changed. The habitant farmer still sows by hand, reaps with a scythe, and threshes with the flail. The Orleans women still ply their looms and spinning wheels. Plows and market carts, drawn by long-horned oxen, are common sights along the island's byways.

Union Pacific Offers Tours

A minimum of train riding and a maximum of horseback riding or other sports which may intrigue the interest of tour members are the noteworthy features of the series of Rocky Mountain vacations planned by the North Western-Union Pacific "Tours for the summer season," says Howard Blanchard, Washington representative of the Union Pacific Railroad.

"These tours were created essentially for the person having only a week's vacation," Blanchard states, "and the details have been worked out in the most meticulous detail, to permit as much time as possible in the Rockies. Here, while staying in comfortable hostelries, and with every cost included in the all-expense plan, the guests on our tours are nevertheless free to enjoy themselves according to their particular desires.

"We feel that members of these parties have diverse tastes and interests. Hence we do not endeavor to plan every hour of every day for them, but rather, give them three full days, for example, in Troutdale-in-the-Pines, for mountain climbing, fishing, riding, photography or other hobbies which the travelers may wish to pursue."

Travelers from the East may join these tours at Chicago.

At the New Jersey Resorts

Atlantic City.

Some two hundred of the Nation's foremost figures in the newspaper, newsreel, magazine and radio fields will be here on June 28, 29 and 30 to attend the seventh annual Headliners Frolic.

During their stay the men will be the guests of the Atlantic City Press Club, and a lengthy program of both business meetings and social events is scheduled.

Highlight of the affair will be the presentation of the annual journalistic achievement awards. These are silver placques which are awarded by the National Headliners Club to those men performing the outstanding journalistic feats between June 1, 1939, and June 1, 1940. Although the classifications in which awards are made are left to the discretion of the award committee, headed by Arthur Robb, editor of Editor and Publisher Magazine, they have not varied a great deal in past years. These include the best exclusive news reporting in the domestic and foreign fields, the best news photograph, the best and most colorful newspaper feature story, the best newsreels, domestic and foreign; the best radio reporting of a news event; best work by a columnist and best by a cartoonist. Awards are also made frequently for outstanding public service by newspapers.

Ocean City, N. J.

With all the facilities of the resort being geared to summer capacity, the season here is stepping into its full stride.

Captain Jack Jernee, of the Ocean City Beach Patrol, and his all-star cast of 40 aquatic athletes are billed for the Hercules Country Club, Wilmington, Del., next Saturday night. The water circus will feature 17 acts and be climaxed by a Life Guard Beauty Contest in which a court of five girls, acting as judges, will place a wreath upon the noble brow of some sun-tanned Adonis. This same show will be staged at the Flanders Pool, in Ocean City, later on in the summer.

Cape May Court House, N. J.

Ideal weather prevails, salt-water anglers are enjoying good catches of weaks, seabass and croakers in Cape May County waters.

Basis for the successful season are the many entries being received in the fifth annual Cape May County Fishing Contest, according to Percy H. Jackson, director of the board of freeholders and in charge of the event.

C. E. Boardman of 927 New York avenue northwest, Washington, was awarded the weekly prize following his catch of tautog that tipped the scales at 5 pounds, 14 ounces.

The weekly prize is attracting many anglers who file their entries immediately on arriving at the dock with the skipper of the party boat, piermaster, bait stores or mail them direct to the fishing contest committee at Court House.

The weekly prize will continue until September 12 while the annual contest itself concludes October 31.

Cape May, N. J.

Cape May's second annual historical pageant, which will be presented here July 25, 26 and 27, is rapidly taking form as members of the committee in charge of the event speed plans for the mammoth production.

More than 300 residents and visitors of this coastal city will participate in the pageant, which will be a living picture of the outstanding events in Cape May's long and colorful history.

Various periods in the development of Cape May will be characterized by dramatic scenes, drawn from the rich background of history which dates back to the early 1600's when Cape May, now America's leading seashore resort, was a tiny whaling village inhabited by a hardy band of New Englanders who had migrated to the southernmost tip of New Jersey in search of whales.

Elaborately costumed to depict accurately the characters they represent, members of the cast portray in pantomime the major events of the three centuries during which Cape May has developed.

Sea Isle City, N. J.

To "just folks"—family loving people who want to enjoy a restful sojourn in the one of the healthiest and most enjoyable places in the vacation world, Sea Isle City holds infinite charm and appeal.

It has what many summer visitors pronounce as the "finest beach in the world," broad, smooth and long. An excellent lifeguard force stands ready to protect its sunned and spray-soaked habitues. Children may be left on the beach without their parents in the care of the guards.

Visitors will find a quaint little resort along the south Jersey coast, with ample accommodations to suit any size family and any size pocketbook. Train connections are frequent and the automobile highways are among New Jersey's finest.

Long Branch, N. J.

Under the leadership of Mayor Alton Evans, Long Branch, one of the oldest and most historic seashore resorts in New Jersey, is becoming one of New York's favorite summer resorts. Emphasis this year is being given to sports, with many improvements being made on golf courses, bridle paths, tennis courts and polo fields.

Record catches reported by anglers are attracting heavy influx of fishermen. Even at this early date the hotel reservations promise to make this season one of the greatest.

Manoir Richelieu To Open on June 25

Favorite of Canada's vacation resorts, the Manoir Richelieu, overlooking Murray Bay, Quebec, will open for the season June 25, John O. Evans, manager of the hotel-resort, announced today.

Cabanas on the beach at Atlantic City

Cape May Friends' Conference July 8

Cape May, N. J.—Preparations for the Friends' General Conference to be held in Cape May from July 8 to July 15 are speeded by plans for one of the largest conferences ever held by the Friends' group.

Delegates from all sections of the United States are expected to attend the week of meetings.

"Building for the World of Tomorrow" will be the theme of the conference.

Montauk Clubs Open for Season

Montauk, N. Y.

Another season at Montauk, at the eastern end of Long Island, opened yesterday. The spacious Montauk Manor and affiliated clubs began operations on that date. The fishing season started long ago, and tenderfoot guests are being entertained at Deep Hollow Ranch.

Miss Ethelda Bleibtroy, manager of the Surf Club and former Olympic swimming champion, promises week-end aquatic programs, and H. Stewart Kenyon, manager of the Yacht Club, has announced two fishing tournaments, one running through July and the other through August. Instructions in yacht sailing will be given and weekly races will be held in Lake Montauk.

If You Are Going to the Pacific Fair The Great American Southwest Beckons

New Orleans, San Antonio, Old Mexico, Carsbad Caverns and the guest ranch country of the Southwest, are all on the route to Los Angeles and San Francisco, with the digression into Mexico, the only one involving any additional railway fares, according to H. B. Bolton, general agent for the Illinois Central System in this territory. The route is that of the I. C.-Southern Pacific's through pullman from Chicago to the Coast.

While a daily air-conditioned sleeping car traverses this route, without change of cars and with an extended layover in New Orleans, passengers may detrain at San Antonio for a side-trip into Mexico, rejoining the sunset route there or at El Paso. A motor side-trip to Carlsbad Caverns commences at the latter point, Mr. Bolton says.

Beyond El Paso, the route lies along the border and through Tucson, Phoenix and Palm Springs, into Los Angeles.

Chamberlin Club Oldest in Virginia

Old Point Comfort, Va.—Laid out first in 1893, the Chamberlin Country Club golf course is the oldest in the entire State. It also has 11 water holes, believed to be more than on any other course in the country. Harry Vardon in 1901 played the first exhibition match ever held in the East before 40 spectators.

Busy Season Expected at Bar Harbor

Bar Harbor, Me.

This New England summer resort, with its combined attractions of surf-pounded rock-bound shores, mountains towering upward into blue skies, crystal-clear lakes and ponds and expansive forest land, has opened the 1940 season. Indications point to a busy summer, with the hotels showing a spurt in bookings and the demand for summer cottages increased, in view of the current travel-America trend which is a result of conditions abroad.

Bar Harbor has long been known as a summer rendezvous of society, drawing smart set personalities from every principal city of the Nation and some from foreign shores. Of recent years, this resort has developed greatly as a mecca for the motoring public and a supreme vacation land, especially since the Government establishment and development of Acadia National Park, which skirts Bar Harbor and is open to the public.

Motor trails, carriage roads, riding and hiking trails, excellent fishing and bathing grounds, a nature guide program which includes mountain climbing, sightseeing boat trips, study of the varied flora, fauna, unusual formations and many other interesting features of the region make up

Scots Speak Only French

At Pointe au Pic in Quebec Province live many families bearing ancient Scottish names. Descendants of Scottish warriors who helped take New France from the French these residents today speak not a word of English. Completely absorbed by the French population they retain only their old country names and "McDougalls" and "Stewarts" and "Robertsons" have one stock reply for tourists who expect them to speak English—"Parlez vous Francais?"

Week-End Vagabond

By Rae Lewis

My own best vagabonding so far this year has been an adventuresome trip down into North Carolina from Norfolk, and you may have the same any week-end, between Saturday evening and Monday morning.

Take the boat to Norfolk Saturday evening, for you will not wish to drive there and then drive all day Sunday too; it would become more fatiguing than enjoyable. Disembarking in Norfolk on Sunday morning, I suggest breakfasting there before taking to the road. Then take No. 27 south. For a road passing through flat country, this is one of the prettiest I have ever traveled, perhaps because it looks so manicured and tidy even where the unpainted shanties list in the still air.

Soon after leaving Norfolk you will pass through Great Bridge, and there is really a bridge there, over the Chesapeake and Albemarle Canal. This is part of the Inland Waterway, running all the way to Florida, on which small boats travel to avoid going into the sometimes treacherous waters outside.

You will see a lot of farming country and several large dairy herds on this road. And soon you will begin to notice something unusual in the farmyards, although your city eyes may not at first recognize the well sweeps. This is a seesaw arrangement with a bucket hanging from one end. Letting the other end up allows the bucket to go down the well for water. When not in use it sticks up in the air like a giant fishing rod. If you're a camera fan, here's atmosphere.

Route 27 becomes 34 when you cross the State line into North Carolina. In the little town of Sligo turn left and give yourself a short side trip by driving a little more than three miles to Currituck. Here you have your first glimpse of those beautiful sounds of North Carolina, which are separated from the ocean by narrow strips of land and provide wonderful hunting and fishing areas. Before you lies Currituck Sound and the land extending into it up on your left is Knott Island.

Go back to Sligo and pick up Route 30 into Elizabeth City, a charming town on the Pasquotank River. Passing through fragrant pine woods and even past some nut tree groves, you approach Elizabeth City on a lengthy low bridge. This is low land between the Pasquotank, as it bends back parallel with itself at Elizabeth City. There are eating places here, as well as in Hertford and Edenton farther down the road, where you may obtain luncheon or a snack if you are hot and thirsty. The waterfronts of all these towns are worth special attention and in Elizabeth City you will see a number of beautiful boats which make their home port there in the summer.

Pick up Route 17 to Hertford. As you approach this town on the Little River, the road passes quite close to the water and here you will see cypress trees with their bulb-shaped bases growing in the water. Turn off the main street to the one running nearest the river and see the attractive homes along the waterside.

Taking 17 again, continue to Edenton, an historic town which looks south to Albemarle Sound. Here you will see Revolutionary War cannon. Spanish moss hangs from old crepe myrtles. Here are old homes and shady streets and historic background, for Edenton was the first permanent settlement in the State, settled about 1658. Old St. Paul's Church was built in 1736 while Edenton was the capital. Nowadays it is a fishing center.

You can cross Albemarle Sound on a bridge a few miles east of Edenton. From here, you can vary the trip to suit yourself, proceeding farther South on 17 if you like. But remember that you must have your car at the Washington boat dock not later than 5:15 and that Sunday afternoon traffic is heavy in Norfolk as everywhere else. It is approximately 82 miles to Edenton as described here, and you will wish to stop somewhere for luncheon, of course. You may return to Norfolk via Suffolk, if you like, by taking 32 from Edenton north, Route 10 in Virginia to Suffolk and then 58 to Norfolk.

Riding in the dune country, along the seashore at Virginia Beach

Ocean City, Md., Again Expects Big Season

Hotels Enlarged; Amusement Means Widened at Resort

Ocean City, Md.

Already embarked on a season that promises to be as brilliant as that enjoyed last year, the vanguard of the annual influx of guests found at Ocean City—Maryland's only seashore resort and ocean port—fully prepared to welcome the pleasure-seekers. Construction and renovation work on virtually all the hotels, apartments and cottages was rushed to completion by the operators and owners in time for the early arrivals. Several hotels have been enlarged, while others were completely remodeled, and scores of new apartments and cottages built, all obtainable at pleasing rates.

Amusement facilities for carefree hours have also been greatly expanded. Skeet shooting devotees will be able to try their skill on the clays at the Ocean City Skeet Club grounds every Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday afternoon. The club is a member of the National Skeet Shooting Association and in addition to the regular weekly shots will hold two registered matches during the season. Visitors to Ocean City (Md.) are welcome to the club's range and are invited to bring their guns along and participate.

An indoor badminton court and table tennis will be available. Pedal boats will be on hand at the Yacht Club basin. On the beach kayaks, fun floats and surf mats can be obtained. Provisions for bicycling enthusiasts, close rivals of the beach fraternity as recreational favorites, have also been increased. More than 500 bikes, including tandems and many singles of the new lightweight type, are conveniently located. In addition a "cycle circle," consisting of a one-eighth mile track, is available for those who wish to confine their pedaling to a limited area.

Virginia Beach Is Voted Favorite Among Resorts

Emphasis on National Defense Gives Tidewater Area Added Interest; Many Army, Navy Posts There

Virginia Beach, Va.

In a State filled from shoreline to mountain empire with innumerable scenic, historic and resort attractions, Virginia Beach this week was selected as one of the three most favored tourist locations in the Old Dominion by travel counselors who direct tourist and travel bureaus in 38 States and Canada. The survey of Virginia's attractions was made under the auspices of the State Conservation Commission, which announced that Virginia Beach, Williamsburg and the Shenandoah National Park far outranked all other areas in popular appeal.

Rapidly forging to the front as one of the east coast's best patronized seaside resorts, Virginia Beach this week is entertaining the largest throng of vacationists ever to visit here in June. Reports submitted to the Chamber of Commerce by hotel operators indicate a substantial gain over previous years, with reservations for future accommodations in advance of preseason expectations.

National emphasis upon defense has concentrated popular attention on this tidewater country because of the increasing activity at the Norfolk Navy Yard and Naval Base, at Langley Field, Fortress Monroe, Fort Story and other Government reservations, and the visitor to Virginia Beach finds himself in the midst of intense preparations by all the services. Battle wagons and sleek cruisers parade past the modern boardwalk, while airplanes roar out to sea overhead. The coast defense guns of Fort Story, at the north end of the beach, give further indication of Uncle Sam's stepping up of preparedness plans.

But the resort's chief emphasis is upon its vacation program, with many additions and improvements to existing facilities available to this season's visitors. Greatest reservations this month are from New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, New Jersey, and the District of Columbia.

Eagles Mere Gives Prospective Visitors Some Tips on Dress

How to have the right garb for any and every occasion and yet not be burdened with superfluous luggage is the problem for every vacationer. Any adequate wardrobe for a two-week stay at Eagles Mere, Pa., lake resort perched high in the Alleghany Mountains, surely should include one warm ensemble, such as a wool sweater and skirt, and one warm coat. Although the July and August days are warm, the evenings and mornings frequently are cool enough for steam heat to feel comfortable.

Cotton evening dresses are smart for the Saturday night dances at either Forest Inn or the Crestmont. While these invariably have long skirts, those with tiny sleeves, covered shoulders or accessory jackets are most popular. During August more formal gowns make their appearance, although the cotton frocks never completely yield the floor. A few hotel guests wear dinner dresses every evening.

Their escorts usually don light trousers, dark coats or reverse the order with light coats, dark trousers, although some all-white evening clothes are worn. The all-black tuxedo or full evening suit never puts in an appearance at dances or dinner . . . or anywhere else during the summer.

A short evening wrap or jacket comes in handy for the women, although many make their sport coats do double duty and others wear anything from short fur jackets to long velvet wraps.

Although shorts or slacks hold sway for tennis, boating, hiking during the morning or afternoon, most hotel guests put on skirts for luncheon. Since swimming is one of the most popular pastimes, most visitors bring at least two bathing suits.

With the exception of the new bathing facilities at the Lakeside, is restricted to the sandy beach at one end of the lake in front of Forest Inn. Some sort of beach shoes and a beach robe are practically a necessity.

A minimum wardrobe then would include: 2 summer evening dresses, usually cotton, possibly one more formal for August wear; 2 bathing suits, cap; beach shoes; beach coat; 2 cotton daytime dresses; 1 wool sweater and skirt; 1 thin cotton sweater and skirt; 1 warm sports coat; evening shoes; walking shoes; 2 tennis or 2 golf ensembles (depending on what active sports you favor); riding clothes . . . if you want to ride; fishing outfit . . . for trout or bass fishing in nearby streams and lakes.

The choice of sports clothes, of course, depends on where the interests of the vacationer lie.

Mt. Washington Hot To Open July 3

Bretton Woods, N. H.

Preparations for the opening of the Mount Washington Hotel July 3 are being rushed here as a $50,000 improvement and modernization program are being completed. Advance season reservations are the most extensive in many years as a result of the "Travel-America" movement and the closing of European resorts.

An extensive program of sports and social activities begin with the opening of the hotel and will continue until mid-September.

Lawson Little, National Open champion, who directs golf activities at Bretton Woods, has announced inauguration of the annual White Mountain invitation four-ball tournament to be held August 2, 3 and 4.

New Federal Highway Open Vast Terrain

Mention ice field to the average tourist and he conjures up a white wilderness peopled with Eskimos, polar bear, puffins and penguins. There is good reason for the picture, as few ice fields are left outside of the polar regions. That's why Jasper National Park in the Canadian Rockies drew a near-record number of visiters last summer and in 1935, when the new Federal Government highway first reached the Columbia ice field.

New Road Opened Up Mt. Mitchell Is Without Toll

Asheville, N. C.

A new free road utilizing portions of the famous Blue Ridge Parkway, taking the motorist without toll to the summit of Mount Mitchell, highest peak in eastern America, has been opened to traffic, according to an announcement made by H. B. Bosworth, supervisor of the Pisgah National Forest.

The new free route takes the motorist from Asheville via U. S. 70 to the junction near Marion, N. C., with N. C. Highway 104, thence to the Buck Creek Gap intersection with the Blue Ridge Parkway, then via the Blue Ridge Parkway to the intersection with the former Mount Mitchell toll road has now become a free highway under National Forest, State and Blue Ridge Parkway supervision.

Work on the widening of the new toll-free link will continue for another month but the highway is open to traffic and is safe.

Floral Displays Lure Vacationists To Skytop, Pa.

Skytop, Pa.

The mountain laurel, Pennsylvania's State flower, has begun its season of blooming, and the bell-like pink and white flowers will brighten the trails and woods for another fortnight. After the laurel will come the blossoming season of the rhododendron, another lovely native flowering plant of the Pocono region which this year should reach the peak of its perfection about the second week in July.

Judging from the profusion of early spring flowers, this year's display of laurel and rhododendron in the Poconos will be the finest in several seasons.

Laurel time will be marked in various ways at Skytop by hikes and outdoor steak roasts, by horseback riding parties and by the laurel season dance at Skytop Lodge next Saturday, June 22.

Tidewater Area Proves Popular

Old Point Comfort, Va.—With the Nation's greatest concentration of historic shrines within a 20-mile radius of this resort, this section of Virginia, known as the "peninsula" is second only to Shenandoah National Park in popularity with out of State visitors, according to a survey just completed by the State Conservation Commission.

By Willard Mutchler.

The Social Security and Federal Trade Commission chess clubs recently met in match play at the Social Security's quarters in the Portland Hotel. Each of the 10 boards was the scene of a hotly contested fray, which renders Social Security's 8½ to 1½ victory deceiving with respect to the closeness of the play. The summary:

Soc. Sec.	C. C.	W.	Fed Tr.	C. C. C.	W.
H. Biller	1		H. J. Lansing	0
M. L. Libman	1		C. McKay	0
T. Perkins	0		P. Tarver	1

M. Levy	1		P. Morehouse	0
S. Borowitz	½		W. E. Clark	½
Total	8½		Total	1½

At the Paul Morphy Chess Club the mammoth match tournament continued apace. J. Neufeld moved, in effect, into first place by winning four consecutive 2 to 0 matches against G. K. Camden, H. B. Richardson, J. D. Sutphen, and H. E. Miller. W. B. Mundelle advanced to second place, despite a 1 to 2 loss to Miller, by trouncing Richardson and J. S. Carpenter, each 2 to 0.

Richardson scored 2 to 1 matches over both Sutphen and W. Plampin. Sutphen won a singlet from Plampin, but dropped two games to C. H. Pustilnik. Pamlin and Carpenter remain with an unfinished match standing one apiece. The standings of players with five or more matches completed follows.

Player.	Matches. W.	L.	Games. W.	L.
J. Neufeld	7	1	15	3
W. B. Mundelle	7	2	17	7
H. B. Richardson	8	3	18	12

Coming Highlights

Two major events are on the local chess calendar this week. District Champion Ariel Mengarini will exhibit his prowess in simultaneous play at the chess divan, Parkside Hotel, at 8 p. m. Wednesday. Players and spectators will be welcomed without charge, but the former are asked to bring their own equipment if possible. The exhibition will be Mengarini's first since acquiring the title.

The public is also invited to witness an inter-club match, on Saturday evening, between the Capital City and Social Security chess clubs. Play will occur in Capital City's quarters at the Hotel Gordon.

Harry E. Garner

From John Danner comes this interesting note::

"I recently saw at the Capital City Chess Club a game, in progress, between the new District champion and an old Maryland title holder—one who prior to 25 years ago held the title for some time—and observed that at the conclusion of three games the score was 50-50. The old timer was Harry E. Garner, who was a life member of the old club that was a predecessor of the present four C's, of which he has been a member since its inception. Mr. Garner has been ill for several years and for the past six months unable to come to the club. It was a real pleasure to see him return and to see that he still retains his old time fire."

(a) The usual continuation is P—Q4.

(b) Kt—B3 is the right continuation, as black drives white onto squares he wishes to reach, without loss of tempos.

(c) Looks nice and all that, but the bishop should not have been exchanged. B—K2 was best.

(d) Black's game is full of "holes." this and QKt3 and Q3. Besides the fact that his bishop is completely closed in, he has no plan of coordination that would give him some counterplay.

When a play adopts a defense in which, shall we say, as in the French Defense, black's second move is P—Q4, then this move must be played, or black is at a disadvantage—the moment he neglects the same. In this game one can easily see why black drifts into a lost position.

(e) If . . ., QxP; 19 Kt—Kt5 and 20 Kt—B7.

(f) Defends and attacks.

(g) At last white is going to win his first pawn. The game crumbles to pieces after that.

(h) Moral: Don't forget your second move in the opening. Very important!

Solution to Problems

The younger W. K. Wimsatt's four-mover, No. 877, was tough! Dr. G. Dobbs, in Chess Review, termed it "A remarkable study and a real tempo dual between the Bishop and Knight." Here are a few of the variations, 1 P-B3, P-R4; 2 Kt-K4, any; 3 Kt(Kt3)-Q2 or R2, etc. If 1 P-B3, B-K4; 2 Kt-K6, K-Kt5; 3 Kt-Kt5 dis. ch, etc. Or after black's second moves of K-R6 or P-R4 or B any, comes, respectively, Kt-B4ch, Kt-Kt5, and Kt-Q4 or B4. Should black's bishop, on move one, go to R7, Kt6, B2, or Ktsq the continuation reads 2 KtxP, any; 3 Kt(Kt3)-Q2 or Q4, etc. Should the black bishop instead go, on move one, to Kt4, K6, Q7, or B8, then 2 Kt-Q3, any; 3 Kt-Qsq or Q5 or B4, etc.

Today's offering, by Dr. Clinton, should prove much easier on solvers.

Bridge

By Marian H. Barre

Until the finals of the Washington Bridge League's annual pair match are played next Wednesday evening, the most discussed partnership in the city is that of Arthur I. Westrich and H. R. King. These are the gentlemen who, after months of obscurity, suddenly leaped back to their former prominence when they won the opening round by an 8-point lead. As 14 points was top the margin constitutes better than a half-board lead.

Held on June 5 at the Hotel Shoreham, the opening session had 52 pairs in competition, 30 partnerships playing in the first flight, the remaining number being assigned to Section B. As there is no elimination in the game the same entries will be pitted against each other this week.

King and Westrich wrung 280 match points from the Masters for a 68 per cent game Scoring 272 points each, two pairs tied for second place. They were Mrs. Jack Bennett and John Donnelly, and Mrs. A. P. Stockvis and S. Garton Churchill. In fourth place came E. B. Conolly and E. A. Perkins with a score of 266; Dr. A. J. Steinberg and Louis Newman had 256½; thus there was a spread of 23½ points from first to fifth. As there is a protest pending these scores are subject to change.

Among the players in Section B, Mrs. A. J. Steinberg paired with Mrs. W. S. Athey led the list with 155½ match points, which was a 22-point lead over Mrs. W. J. Tidball and Colonel E. B. Gray. This practically cinches the win unless fortunes of war bring a serious reverse to the leaders. Other pairs showing in this section were S. H. Worcester and R. E. Wenzel, 131½ match points; F. M. Lake and D. C. Elliott, 130, and Mrs. John Seward and H. C. Parkinson, 129.

The current contest is restricted to members of the Washington League and is the premier pair event in that organization. In order to qualify for it, a member must participate in a required number of monthly games. Division into sections is regulated by each member's seasonal score. Capture of section is the ambition of every member.

• • • •

Unlike the pair match, the Masters' Game, which is the only remaining contest in the League, is open to all players who hold one or more National Master Points in the American Contract Bridge League. In consequence, Washington will be the mecca for out-of-town luminaries when the Masters' event is held on the first and third Wednesdays of July. The Shoreham Hotel again will be the arena.

• • • •

Alvin Roth and Oscar Brotman, District experts, are defending the Maryland Masters' title in Baltimore today. The two-session game opened yesterday at the Longfellow Hotel. Another local pair competing are Louis Newman and John D. Mothershed who were runners-up last year.

• • • •

The Life Masters of the American Contract Bridge League have no intention of surrendering their liberties even though the liberties involved are such as they seldom exercise. Nor are the Masters willing to take on the duties of bridge police. They made this unmistakably clear when they refused the Leagues request that they form a committee to curb betting at tournaments. This matter came up last month when the League attempted to strengthen its anti-gambling stand. The Life Masters replied that they seldom bet, but they refused to go on the beat.

Free entry fees for the Annapolis Tournament were won by Morris Portugal when he captured the final prize series at the Roosevelt Hotel, defeating Mrs. Lawrence Davern by less than 2 points. Portugal's average score was 60.1, Mrs. Darvern made 58.9. With the conclusion of the series the Roosevelt Thursday evening games will be discontinued until after Labor Day.

Playing in the private games held the Recreational Association of the Railroad Retirement Board, Mrs. Dorothy Whitcomb also acquired the right to play in Annapolis free of charge. Her win was made in a 6-game series with her average per cent 58.6. Mrs. Jean Henry ranked second with 58 per cent.

'Picture of the Week'

The judges of the Post's "Picture of the Week" contest have chosen a print by Luella F. Penfold, of 329 Thirty-fourth street northeast, as the winner of the $5.00 cash award. This print, though not titled, shows a detail from a well known War Memorial in this city and has faithfully reproduced the character of the metal. A Korelle Reflex was used, giving an exposure of 1/50 of a second at F .11

Rules of the Contest

All amateur photographers among The Post's readers are invited to submit entries in The Post's "Picture of the Week" competition. The prize-winning picture will appear on this page and there will be a prize of $5 for the winner, to be selected by The Post's photographic staff.

RULES:

1. Competition open to everyone except professional photographers and Post employes.

2. Submit as many entries as you wish.

3. Competition ends Wednesday, midnight. The winning picture will be published in the following Sunday's Post.

4. No prints will be returned. By submitting an entry, the contestant automatically gives permission to The Post to use it in any way.

5. The Post will pay $5 for the picture selected as the best of the week.

6. Address your entries to PIX, The Washington Post, Washington, D. C.

7. Write name and address plainly on back of each entry. Give date and title of contest and tell type of camera used, lighting conditions, etc.

Photographs entered in this week's competition must reach The Washington Post by midnight, Wednesday, June 19. Do not duplicate pictures entered in previous contests; the best photograph in the group will be awarded the prize.

The World Is Yours

"Blind as A Bat"

Like most old adages, "Blind as a Bat," falls far short of the truth. Bats fly around in the dark, but they are perfectly capable of flying in broad daylight without being dazzled.

How they fly in the dark is still a mystery, but they apparently "hear" their way through the black shadows of night. By incessant chirping, mostly inaudible to us, and probably by listening to the echo, they seem to judge with such uncanny accuracy their distance from objects that they rarely strike anything.

Experiments on the bat's special guiding sense have demonstrated amazing results. One scientist suspended thin black wires from the rafters of the experiment room at distances about 11 inches apart. Bats were liberated in the room and each time a bat came close to the wires, or crossed through, or appeared to dodge, it was counted as a trial. In over 2,000 trials with 47 bats there were only 25 per cent of collisions with the wires.

In another trial with 12 of the same animals, after covering their eyes, the percentage of hits was only 22, or even better than when the eyes were not covered. In a third experiment the ear orifice was closed before liberating the animals. At once the percentage of hits increased to about 66.

Walton League Is Champion Of Wildlife, Conservation

By Richard Oulahan, 3d

This is the sixth in a series on nature groups in Washington.

"Defender of woods, waters and wildlife"—that is the subtitle of the Izaak Walton League of America. It is an accurate description, too, for the League participates in practically every essential conservation movement in the country. On hearing the name of the league one instantly recalls the "Compleat Angler" and logically concludes that this is a fisherman's club. But such is not the case.

At the time of the Izaak Walton League's inception, in 1922, that was the idea—to form an angler's society. Almost immediately, however, the group expanded its platform and today every major conservation problem is stressed equally on the league's program with the situation in streams and the briny deep.

The Izaak Walton League of America is a compact group of small local chapters and larger State groups, closely allied, and thus forming the national organization. In this way the conservation needs of small areas can be handled by the local chapters, more far-reaching problems can be taken care of by the State branches, and national policy can be determined by the league as a whole.

50,000 Members

Over United States

Membership in the league is in the neighborhood of 50,000 and is distributed all over the United States. Chapters are located in 35 States and the District of Columbia. The league is governed by an executive board, State heads and local officers, all elected annually. National headquarters are in the Merchandise Mart, Chicago, and the president of the league is Otto C. Doering. An annual convention serves to knit closer together the parts of the league, and to formulate the national program. Delegates to the convention elect the officers for the ensuing year. Convention city for 1941 is Washington.

Membership in the Izaak Walton League is open to all, and in its ranks one finds conservationists ranging from the millionaire sportsmen of the cities to the barefoot boys of the rural districts. Women's auxiliaries and a junior branch are important parts of the league. The yearly dues of members, together with fees from special memberships and the income from a permanent endowment fund, finances the Izaak Walton League. Outdoor America, monthly publication of the league, is distributed to members, and other special bulletins are issued from time to time.

Accomplishments of the league are myriad. Some of the more important achievements that the group is directly or partly responsible for include the establishment of a wildlife and fish refuge in the upper Mississippi Valley; the saving of Superior National Forest as a wilderness area; the passage of the bass law by Congress, prohibiting the commercial sale of black bass; the preservation of Colorado's Royal Gorge from exploitation and destruction; and the conservation of Great Falls of the Potomac as a part of the National Capital Park system. Countless other successes have been won by the league, as a national society, individually by the State and local branches, and in cooperation with other conservation agencies.

The program of the Izaak Walton League falls into seven principal categories. Conservation education is a primary objective. Nonpolitical, self-supporting units of wildlife preservation, protection and extention of State and national forest systems and the the public parks, are urged. Preservation of the Nation's water resources is sought, as is a sound policy of proper land use. Particular stress is given the problem of pollution of the Nation's streams, and the league is now actively combating this evil.

The District of Columbia chapter of the Izaak Walton League is a large and thriving group. J. F. Stowell heads the chapter, which has a membership of around 200. A cosmopolitan group, the Washington branch numbering among its members such well-known anglers as Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, Dr. William Mann, Bill Ackerman, fishing editor of The Post; E. F. Colladay, Republican national committeeman; Clem L. Shaver, former chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and Charles H. Taylor, assistant director of the CCC.

Washington headquarters are at the Willard Hotel, and there meetings are held on the second Wednesday of each month. The executive committee meets on the first Wednesday of each month.

Problems affecting Washington are not as complex as in other sections. In the first place, there is no hunting in the District of Columbia, and very little fishing. But serious troubles do exist here. Most important of these involves the historic Potomac, which serves as a disposal stream for the neighborhood, and is a menace to the public health and aquatic life alike. Largely through the efforts of the local Waltonites, Federal and State appropriations have been won for the purpose of purifying the river, and the Potomac will shortly be restored to its primitive cleanliness.

Water Chestnut

Cleanup Program

Connected with the Potomac cleanup campaign is the presence in the river and its tributaries of water chestnut. This undesirable plant clogs the estuaries and inlets of the Potomac all the way to the salt water line, and chokes out the natural feeding grounds of fish and waterfowl alike. Much like the starling, this menace was imported from the Orient. An active campaign is being waged by the District of Columbia Chapter of the Izaak Walton League to clear local waterways of the water chestnut.

A more aesthetic accomplishment of the local group, in cooperation with other conservation agencies, has been the recent act of Congress providing for the restoration of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal as a national park and recreation center.

Last winter the local chapter assisted the Walton clubs in Maryland and Virginia in the feeding over the severest period of the cold wave, of hundreds of thousands of waterfowl, isolated and starving in the ice-choked Chesapeake Bay.

In this manner the Izaak Walton League of America functions. A closely knit, progressive conservation club, this league of "compleat anglers" is alert to the needs of conservation in America. Through its many eyes it sees needs for action, large and small, as they appear, and its good works are indelibly marked on the American scene, in the name of the greatest of fishermen, and his twentieth century disciples.

What Scientists are doing

Venus Reaching Its Peak

Venus, the beautifully brilliant celestial body that adorns the western sky like a steadily glowing diamond, has reached its greatest altitude and sets earlier each evening until during the latter part of June it will be lost in the haze of the setting sun and on June 26 will cross to the other side of the sun and become a morning star.

Those who would like to hunt for the elusive planet Mercury that is so close to the sun that it is never seen in a dark sky will have an opportunity to see it in the best position for observation a few days before and after June 24 when it reaches its greatest elongation or greatest distance from the sun. On that date it will reach its greatest altitude, 25 degrees, and will be higher in the sky than Venus.

Measles Breaking Precedent

Measles is a peculiar disease. It has a habit of recurring in greater frequency in alternate years. A year with a great many cases is followed by a year with very few cases. This cycle has held good for the last 40 years with four exceptions. The years 1913, 1918, 1931 and 1936 should have been low years but instead made pairs of high years, after which the regular high-low cycle started again. Heretofore, as far back as the records of the New York City Health Department go, there never have been two low years together. This year, however, may mark the exception. Last year was a low year with only 3,853 cases and 1938 was a high year with 34,604 cases. If this year were to follow the high-low cycle it would be expected to be a high year but instead there were reported during the first quarter only 565 cases.

Iconoscope for Amateurs

The inconoscope, the television camera eye, has been made available for amateur use by the perfection in the R. C. A. laboratories at Harrison, N. J., of an inconoscope which sells for slightly less than $25 and which makes it possible for an amateur to build a complete television transmitting and receiving set for less than $300. Amateurs who now have a two-and-a-half meter transmitting set for code or voice will find it easy to adapt their set for television broadcasts alternating with voice.

The new inconoscope transmits a picture one-and-a-half inches square. This may be enlarged at the receiving end. In a set in which the iconoscope was demonstrated the received picture had three times this area. The transmitted picture has 120 scanning lines giving reproduction equivalent to that in newspaper pictures.

Colombia Will Issue Stamps On Olympics

Colombia has announced that a set of commemorative stamps will be issued in December for the fifth national Olympics. Complete details of the affair and the stamps will be announced at a later date. However, the stamps will be as follows: Postage, 1-centavos, green, athletics; 5-centavos, brown, disc thrower; 10-centavos, orange, basket ball; 15-centavos, blue, cycling; 50-centavos, violet, swimming; 1-peso, rose, tennis; air mail, 5-centavos, gray, target practice. It has also been stated that there will be a souvenir sheet of each denomination and these will be sold at 2 pesos per sheet.

Dominican Republic issued a set of four denominations on May 6, 1940, honoring Mother's Day. The design of the stamps is the same, the chief feature being a portrait of Juloa Molina Vda Trujillo, mother of President Trujillo. On either side of the portrait are designs of flowers. At the two lower sides of the stamps are the words "Primera Madre de La Republica," meaning the "First mother of the republic." The values, colors and quantities printed are as follows: 1-centavos, green and dark green, 400,000; 2-centavos, red and yellow, 100,000; 3-centavos, yellow brown and yellow, 600,000, and 7-centavos, dark blue and light blue, 100,000.

Russia has released without advance notice the 1939 World's Fair stamps, imperforate, in honor of the 1940 fair. There is no Russian exhibit at the fair this year but the stamps, two in number, were issued on May 10, the day before the fair opened. The 30-kopec, slate gray, dark blue and scarlet, depicts the bronze statue of a Soviet worker holding aloft the red star of Russia which was the chief figure at the 1939 fair. The 50-kopec, blue and brown, illustrates the Russian building at the fair. Reports have it that the issue has been limited to 20,000 sets. First-day covers have appeared here with circular cancelations with the French inscription "Moscoa-Etranger," Moscow-Foreign Mail. Within the circle are the numerals "1054014," the first five standing for the tenth day of the fifth month of 1940.

San Salvador will issue a new air mail series. There will be a 15-centavos, ochre, 150,000; 20-centavos, green, 150,000; 25-centavos, violet, 100,000, the designs of these being that of coffee trees in bloom; 30-centavos, brown, 1,000,000, and 1-colon, black, 80,000, the latter designs showing coffee trees with ripe berries. The stamps will be engraved and 25 by 35 millimeters in size.

Stamps

The new commemorative stamps will be released in July, one for the fiftieth anniversary of the admission to statehood of Idaho, at Boise, Idaho, on July 3 and the other for the fiftieth anniversary of Wyoming at Cheyenne, Wyo., on July 10. Then the Coronado commemorative is now being designed, release day as well as details not yet having been approved. The Idaho stamp shows the State Capitol at Boise and the photograph used was one made by the Williams' photograph service of Boise. The stamp was designed by William K. Schrage and the engravers were James R. Lowe for the vignette and John S. Edmondson the lettering.

Post officials state that it has never been the policy of the Department to issue semi-postal stamps. Revenues derived from the sale of such stamps are used for some funds outside Government receipts. Congressional authorization would be required to issue a Red Cross stamp for Red Cross purposes, these officials declare, for the Department cannot use postal funds for any charity.

There have been requests for many years for some sort of a Red Cross stamp. The Department issued on May 21, 1931, a stamp commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the American Red Cross. This stamp was 2-cent denomination and printed in black and red and showed a nurse kneeling before a globe with outstretched hands, the design being taken from the 1930 poster entitled "The Greatest Mother." Red Cross officials would be pleased to have another Red Cross stamp issued.

There are 203 lots of stamps, covers and coins listed for sale at the dead letter sale to be held on Thursday, June 27, starting at 9:30 a. m., in room 3005, third floor, City Post Office, North Capitol and Massachusetts avenue northwest. The lots will be ready for inspection from 9:30 a. m. to 3 p. m., on Wednesday, June 26.

The sales at the Philatelic Agency in May amounted to $170,359.60.

A special cachet will be applied to all first-day covers on the air mail, passenger and express service between Seattle, Wash., and Juneau, Alaska, via Ketchikan, which will be inaugurated on June 20.

The Capital Precancel Club met at the Thomson Community Center on Monday evening and voted not to hold a round-up as was recently discussed. The meeting scheduled for June 24 will be held at the home of the president, Rolston Lyon, 217 Rittenhouse street northwest.

Philatelic meetings scheduled for the week are as follows: Monday evening, Washington Air Mail Society, Thomson Community Center; Tuesday evening, Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., Thomson Community Center, and East Washington Stamp Club, Eastern High School, and Wednesday evening, Washington Philatelic Society, Mayflower Hotel.

Dr. Ashley Robey, box 96, State College, Ark., asks that all mail bids for the donation auction in connection with the Precancel Stamp Society convention at Houston, Tex., August 16 to 19, be submitted by June 22.

The recently issued "penny black" commemorative stamp issued by Mexico will be used on the covers mailed on the S. S. Iroquois, by the Cuba Mail Line, which begins its service on June 29 operating between Mexico, Cuba and the United States.

The 1-cent British Guiana 1856, which is one of the world's most valuable stamps, will be exhibited at the World's Fair, New York City, this summer. Mrs. A. Hind Scala, of Utica, N. Y., owns the stamp, having received it from her late husband's collection. It will be recalled that some years ago Mrs. Scala gave her permission to the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., of this city to further a popular subscription to purchase the stamp and present it to the Smithsonian Institution. Permission was granted by the Institution for the purpose but the project was not carried out.

The sale this month of the collection of United States stamps by George R. M. Ewing, of New York City, is not without a certain pang of regret by the owner. He assembled every bit of it and with the exception of 314-A, it is 100 per cent complete on the twentieth century major varieties. Die proofs appear in three or four instances as Ewing collected stamps at all times. He also used official Post Office Department notices, photographs showing the source of designs and other items of like nature.

He spent more than 50 years collecting, for it was in 1890 than an uncle gave him his first United States stamp, used copies of the postage dues J-1 through J-7.

These dues started him collecting with the result that one of the most notable collections was assembled.

Ewing has this to say which may be passed on as something real:

"Collecting stamps means that one not only collects 'stamps' but also 'friendships' as well, and when—as in this instance—one has to let go of the stamps, one still retains the friendships and to 'oldsters' that means something we can't put into words."

The following is a list of postage stamp plate numbers issued by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in May, 1940:

Six-cent air mail postage stamp, center, electrolytic, 1938 series, subject, 50 flat, 22,603, 22,606, 22,607, 22,608, 22,609, 22,610, 22,611, 22,612 2,613 and 22,614.

The following is a list of postage stamp plate numbers sent to press in May, 1940:

Three-cent, commemorative postage stamp, fiftieth anniversary of Statehood of Wyoming, 1940 series, 200 subject, electric eye convertible, May 3, 1940, 22,583 and 22,584; May 6, 1940, 22,585 and 22,586.

Three-cent, ordinary postage stamp, book stamp, 1938 series, 380 subject, electric eye convertible, May 10, 1940, 22,434 and 22,435.

Ladies' night was observed by the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., at its meeting on Tuesday evening at Thomson Community Center, Col. Charles S. Hamilton, president, acting as master of ceremonies. There were guests, speakers, the usual bourse and an exhibition by the ladies of the club who displayed a score of frames of stamps. Ladies of the Philatelic Agency were also in attendance as special guests.

Mrs. Margaret Howard, of the national headquarters of the American Red Cross, was among the speakers and gave an interesting as well as vivid story of Red Cross relief work in the war-stricken countries of Europe. Several members of the club have relatives and friends in Austria, Finland, Poland, Denmark, the Netherlands, Belgium and other nations and the relief work as carried on in behalf of those people was told with special interest to all present. The work of the information bureau was touched upon and several members questioned the speaker as to the means of reaching the friends who are now missing.

O. L. Rogers, philatelic agent, told of the work of the Philatelic Agency and of the many problems his division was called upon to solve. The work is practically up-to-date and the material available is always in good order and acceptable. A guests with Mr. Rogers were Mrs. Shawn, Miss Mabel Stennert, Miss Bond and Miss Stoner.

James F. Duhamel, senior member of the club and a former president, conducted an interesting questionnaire concerning postoffice affairs in Washington.

Among those who exhibited were the following: Mrs. Henry C. Workman, Victoria, Switzerland; Mrs. Wilna C. Rice, Luxemburg, Bavaria and Poland; Mrs. E. B. Martin, first-day cover of Egypt issues; Miss Williamson, New York World's Fair issues, Constitution commemoratives of foreign nations honoring the United States and the commemoratives of the Pan American Union for the fiftieth anniversary of the union's founding; Mrs. Grace L. MacKnight, Red Cross and charity stamps of many nations and posters of the Red Cross; Mrs. Mabel L. Wilson, United States current cancellations and postmarks, and Mrs. Bessie L. Dudley, photographs of the Byrd Antarctice expedition and covers and first-day issues.

Nominations were made as follows: For president, William M. Stuart and D. H. Reichgut; vice president, Mrs. Grace L. MacKnight and Valdemar Weiergang; recording secretary, Edward B. Martin; treasurer, C. H. Vaughn; trustees, Svend Yort and F. R. Rice. Other nominations will be in order at the meeting on Tuesday at which time an auction and exhibition will be held.

Bridge Winners

At the American Association of University Women—First, Mr. and Mrs. Rufino Ramos; second, Mrs. Goodwin Graham and Miss Margaret Wentworth; third, Miss Isabel DuBois and Miss Doris Rothwell.

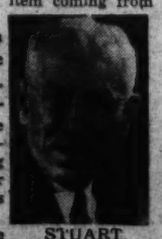
At the LaSalle Street Apartment—Monday evening, first, Mrs. Catherine Tidball and Col. E. B. Gray; second, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Gregg Custis; third, Miss Jane Bittner and Bill Reynolds. Thursday afternoon, first, Col. and Mrs. E. B. Gray; second, John Donnelly and Wessal Stewart; third, Mrs. Frances W. Brown and Mrs. L. Riesse.

At 1355 Euclid Street—First, Tuesday, Lew Newman and Russell Bell; second, Mrs. C. W. Zimmer and Col. E. B. Gray; third, Mrs. Helena Evans and Mrs. D. M. Stephan. First, Tuesday evening, Dora Schwartz and Mildred Rosson; second, Miss Jenkins and Mr. Lyons; third, Mrs. Katherine Cotton and A. M. Shepard. First, Wednesday, Mrs. Katherine Cotton and Mr. Gershon; second, Helena Evans and Mrs. Sheldon; third, Mrs. J. A. Sons and John Donnelly. First, Mr. and Mrs. L. V. Crane; second, Kark Tikin and Paul E. Neff; third, James Athey and James Sions. First, Miss Kathleen McNutt and W. A. Bolinger; second, Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Steinberg; third, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Rosson.

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart

The European war accounts directly for at least 400 varieties of new postage stamps. The general collector is eager to secure every variety of stamp or other philatelic item coming from Europe.



STUART.

Since the first Nazi invasion of Austria many new fields of stamp collecting have been opened. Many old issues of Austria, Sudetenland, Czecho-Slovakia, Memel, Poland, Denmark, Norway, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and Belgium are now considered rare items, German occupation having added scores of new values. The tragic war in Finland also brought out various stamps now eagerly sought.

The change in postal rates is responsible for new values in France, as well as in several other countries. It is estimated the rate differences in France and its possessions has resulted in 294 new varieties including many overprints and surcharges. Shortage of stamps in certain denominations also has been responsible for new values, each item having its proper place in the album.

Occupation stamps which have been issued in Danzig and Poland are much in demand. There are also issued military, semipostal and other charity stamps in the war-torn countries. As the number of new issues increases almost daily absolutely correct figures are not available.

OUR TOWN In Pictures

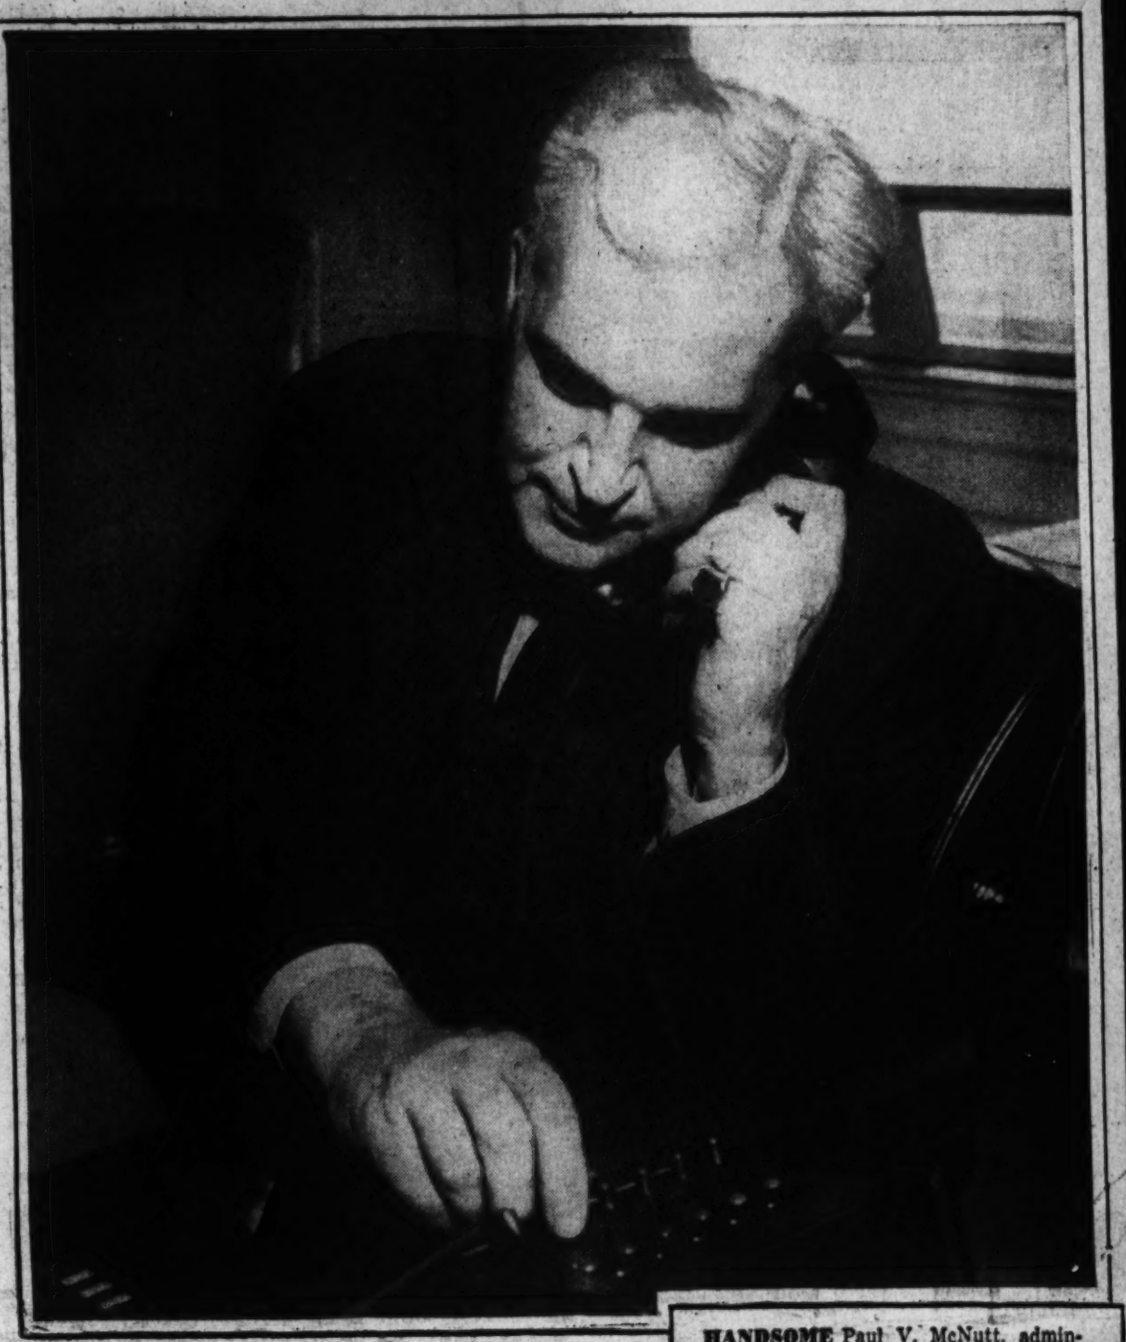
DRESSING for retreat, Andrew Malenchek, Matthew Yaksic, Henry Pacuska and Richard Payette—of the Fort Hunt Camp—are typical of 2,200,000 boys who have had CCC training.



HANDSOME Paul V. McNutt, administrator of the huge new Federal Security Agency, calls for a secretary.

The Post Visits Federal Security Agency

By Christine Sadler

On what reserves can the Nation call for workers needed in the huge defense program about-to get under way? How much training have they had, and how can they get more?

When The Post visited the Federal Security Agency last week it heard discussion of these questions from all sides.

Men in charge of CCC and NYA programs and officials of the Office of Education were holding conferences on the amount of vocational training American boys and girls have received during the past decade, how more could be secured quickly and how those already trained could be shifted into an expanding industry.

With millions of unemployed registered with the Employment Service for jobs, the Social Security Board naturally was very much concerned with the defense program, too.

At U. S. Public Health Service, doctors were busy with the only real medical research programs now possible in the world.

NEXT WEEK

"Our Town in Pictures" for the next two weeks will be devoted to the District of Columbia and how it is governed.

Photos in this section by Post Photographers Goodwin, Del Vecchio and Klemm and from U. S. P. H. S. files.

IN THE NYA woodworking shop here William Turner learns about lathes, becomes good defense prospect.

OFFICE OF EDUCATION takes lead in radio. Vera Phillips, Jack Arnold hold records of "Americans All—Immigrants All."

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE is doctor for the Coast Guard. Dr. H. G. Williams examines heart of First Class Seaman Joseph Kuchta.

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE is part of Social Security Board. Mrs. Louise Walstrom takes Hildegard Rothenbach's job application.

Education Office Aids Thousands

U. S. Office of Education was established in 1867 "to promote the cause of education." Until last year it operated from 1869 under Department of the Interior.

For the most part, its work consists of surveys, conferences and advisory suggestions. With Federal aid to education increasing along many different fronts, its duties grow greater.

Through its surveys, the office is in possibly the best position to know how school systems can expand their work to take care of vocational training needed in Nation's defense program.

Commissioner J. W. Studebaker, working on an overtime basis during last few weeks, has recommended summer schools, extra shifts during the school year and expanded trade extension program for unemployed workers.

Dr. Studebaker believes in forums as a means of education, started the first adult educational forums in the country. At left, he and Dr. Chester S. Williams, assistant administrator of the Federal forums project, study the current schedule. The Office of Education sponsors the project.

OFFICE of Education has taken lead in educational training for CCC camps. Dr. Howard Oxley (right), director of the program, confers with Dr. Ralph C. M. Flynt, special assistant, and Dr. J. Russell Cook, administrative assistant.

VOCATIONAL education's place engages attention of Commissioner Studebaker, Dr. C. F. Klinefelter, assistant to commissioner; Assistant Commissioner Bess Goodykoontz and Dr. J. C. Wright, assistant commissioner.

RADIO IS A FIELD in which Office of Education has taken the lead. Its broadcasts have gained a Nation-wide audience. Under its urgings, schools are hastening to utilize new medium to the fullest. Planning a "Let Freedom Ring" program are Joseph Swire, Dr. Harry Jager, Dr. Klinefelter and W. D. Boutwell.

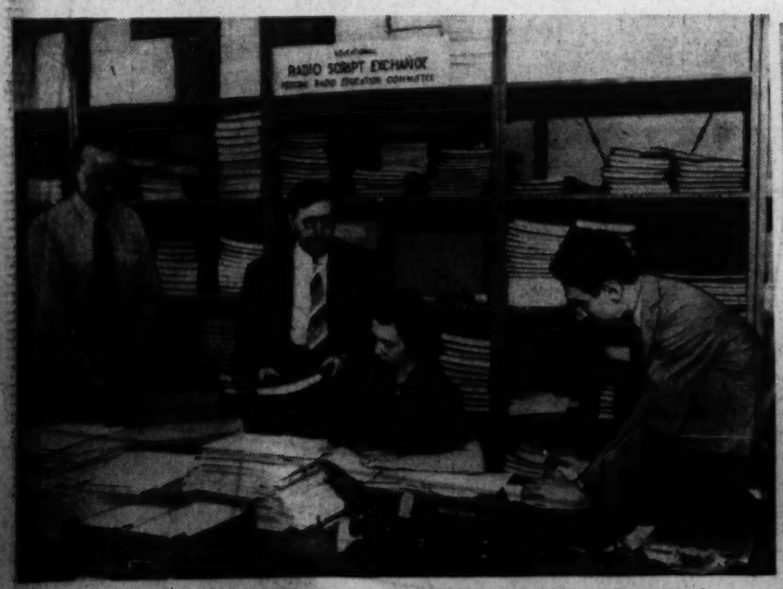
CONCENTRATING on radio script continuity are Writers Allan Wilson, at typewriter, and Burr Cook. Rule is: Keep it simple and be sure it has variety.

THOUSANDS OF LETTERS pour into office as result of broadcasts. Ben Brodinsky dictates to Hanna Nathanson answers to questions asked in one of them, thanks listener for suggestions.

WHEN OFFICE FORCE works out a radio script that can be used by schools throughout the Nation many copies are made by this battery of WPA typists. Literature, biography, history—all can be dramatized for the air.

AIDS FOR LISTENERS also concern Office of Education. Listener Aid Editor Clarence Barker confers with Phil Herget and Paul Bojikes. Radio executives and school leaders work with Dr. Studebaker on Federal Radio Education Committee.

"DEMOCRACY IN ACTION" is popular program. J. Clark Waldron and Irene Levy, of station relations section, "spot" stations to be brought into network for a broadcast. Most of the office's programs go on air from New York.



MORE THAN 250,000 SCRIPTS have been supplied to schools and local broadcast groups by Educational Radio Script Exchange, started on "circulating library" basis. N. J. Buford, Mrs. Ruth Grant, Harry Talbert, L. G. Morgan assemble orders.

SACKS OF SCRIPTS FOR MAILING are assembled by WPA workers. Approximately 1,600 stay in circulation. Single scripts circulate for three weeks. Information concerning radio as a career is sent to hundreds of school children annually.

ONE RADIO PROGRAM, "Americans All—Immigrants All," has been electrically transcribed and is available in record form. Gordon Studebaker, director of the exchange, listens to a playback of the 24 recordings.

Paul McNutt Heads FSA

In charge of coordinating work of divisions put into the big new Federal Security Agency is Paul V. McNutt, known throughout the organization as "the Governor."

With a flair for the dramatic and a great capacity for work, ability of "the Governor" to get the FSA into effective and efficient running order has not been seriously doubted.

Under Reorganization Plan IV, effective July 1, the Food and Drug Administration, Howard University, Freedmen's Hospital, St. Elizabeths Hospital and Columbia Institute for the Deaf will be added to the FSA.

This will give "the Governor" an organization of 27,000 employes.

1. ADMINISTRATOR McNUTT has the tie-collecting habit. Houseman Aubrey Kirk helps him select one from the hangers, which hold 300, of all colors.

2. ASSISTANT FSA ADMINISTRATOR Wayne Coy and Administrator McNutt confer in the latter's office at National Institute of Health. FSA agencies are scattered throughout the city. One agency, Social Security Board, is soon to move into new Washington Building.

3. ON A BRIEF INSPECTION TRIP to Howard University, formerly with Interior Department, "the Governor" and Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of the school, start across campus from the new library building.

4. AT HOME IN THE SHOREHAM HOTEL Administrator McNutt dines with his family—in which good looks obviously are unanimous. Daughter Louise is home from Indiana University, where her father was once a student and later dean of the law school. Attractive Mrs. McNutt has become popular during less than a year in Washington.

5. EVEN THE McNUTT DOG is glamorous! His name is Skipper, and he likes "the Governor" like nobody's business. Administrator McNutt apparently returns the compliment.

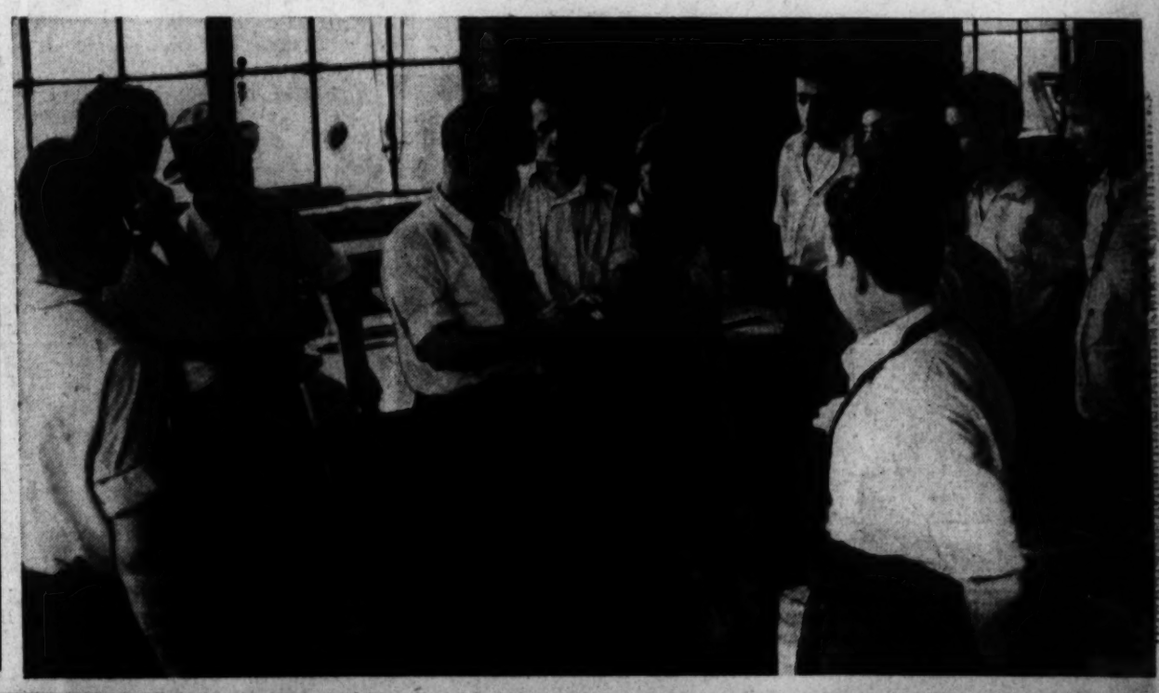
NYA Helps 2,500,000

Since the National Youth Administration was established in 1935 more than 2,500,000 boys and girls have participated in its work programs.

Purposes of the NYA are threefold. First is to provide unemployed and out-of-school youth with part-time employment on socially useful projects. Second is to assist needy young people in earning their way through school. Third is to provide vocational guidance. First and third objectives often overlap.

At right, W. R. Snapp, in charge of local NYA workshop, assigns work for afternoon.

A TOTAL OF 3,258 BOYS AND GIRLS are now on NYA projects in the District of Columbia. Of these, 1,774 are in school, working part-time to make from $6 to $25 a month on school projects. A total of 1,484 boys and girls are on the work program, working 54 hours a month for 30 cents an hour. Forty-one work projects have been set up in the District. The Post visited the woodworking shop of Project No. 9, which is housed at 460 New York avenue northwest. The project combines work with vocational training. In other words, the workers are trained vocationally while engaged on useful projects. Joseph Chillemi (above) learns about woodworking while making tennis paddles for Washington playgrounds.



JOHN BAKER RECEIVES INSTRUCTION in wood planing from Supervisor Karl Anderson. There are 117 workers on Project 9. Forty-eight of them are employed in the map-making department of Rural Electrical Administration as draftsmen and clerical workers. Sixty-nine are employed in this shop to make furniture, equipment and models for REA and other Government agencies.

WILLIAM TURNER WORKS with the radial saw. Twenty girls employed on this project make wax food models and posters describing a balanced diet for a family of four. This material is used by the Public Health Department in its clinics. On projects such as this boys and girls have an advantage often lacking in school. The problem is "real," not just set up for class.

1,500 CCC Camps Teach 2,200,000 Young Americans

Through the 1,500 CCC camps of the United States since 1933 have gone more than 2,200,000 young Americans between the ages of 17 and 23. Enrollment in the camps today totals over 300,000.

Boys enroll for 6 months, but can reenlist and remain in camp for as long as two years.

While the CCC has not given military training, it has strengthened national defense by teaching discipline, by improving physical condition of enrollees, by training them in skills which will be useful during the emergency in which the Nation finds itself today.

Boys who come out of CCC camps, for the most part, are in tiptop physical shape, know how to do many different types of labor. Many of them are skilled in vocations.

Pictures on this page were made at the camp located in Fort DuPont Park and give an idea of the variety of things taught CCC boys when they are not on regular work jobs. At left, Mary Crabtree, WPA instructor, watches Frank Milerski put finishing touches on a piece of sculpture.

CCC BOYS LEARN TO DRIVE AMBULANCES, as Clifton Wetherington demonstrates. Most of the Fort DuPont boys are from Maryland, with a lesser percentage of them from Pennsylvania and the District. In addition to camp instruction, fifteen of the enrollees now attend evening vocational classes at Abbott High School, while others go to McFarland School at night for academic training.

IN THE CARPENTER SHOP, Walter R. Thomas lets Louis Tsendeas and Lester Nelson in on some of the fine points of sawing.

IN THE AUTO MECHANICS CLASS, John Flynn instructs Howard Allison, William Steward, Alex Woods, George Schlatterbeck, Clarence Friends, Homer Everhart, Francis Cierbo, Albert Ebbits and Curtis Mills. Even during depression depths, good auto mechanics found work.

SUBJECT OF THIS FIRST AID CLASS is the Thomas splint and how it should be applied. Joseph Sidor, in center, is instructor. The Fort DuPont camp was established in July, 1935, to work in the National Capital Park areas and southeastern part of the District.

RUDIMENTS OF COOKING also are in the curriculum of CCC boys. Mess Sergeant James B. Edward instructs William Walters, William Pumphrey and John Bayne in the correct thickness of gravy and how to get it.

HOW TO WAIT ON TABLES is a useful thing to know. Here come Walter Novak, William Holmes, William Walters, Garner Buttrum, Charles Walker and Kenneth Warren with vegetables intended for the evening meal.

OFFICE PRACTICES, too, are included. James Harvill and Stanley Koterwas learn the touch system while Instructor Scott Hobaugh checks up on Joseph Sidor and what he has learned about the adding machine.

ALL CCC BOYS are taught citizenship and the responsibilities it entails. Paul M. Haines, educational advisor, is instructor here. Fort DuPont boys made their own swimming pool, constructing it in their spare time.

TRAINING IS SUITED to boy's needs and capabilities. Some have to start at the beginning. In this literacy training class Ford Wilgis, Arthur Berned, Wilner McKenney and Lester Nelson learn about writing, with Mr. Haines as instructor.

CCC BOYS LEARN TO DRIVE TRUCKS, the same as ambulances. Fort DuPont boys make a line to watch Curtis Mills bring one of the big National Park Service numbers up the hill following a truck driving lesson.

1. LIFE OF HENRY PACUSKA and Richard Payette, making beds at Fort Hunt CCC Camp (above), is typical of that led by 300,000 other boys between ages of 17 and 23 enrolled in 1,500 CCC camps throughout the Nation. Neatness and order are rules.

2. ROOMS OUT OF THE WAY, Henry and Richard and Thomas Kelly accompany 185 other Fort Hunters to Rock Creek Park work project, develop muscles building flood walls.

3. LUNCH BREAKS THE WORK DAY. Usually it is served on the job, taken out hot in a special truck. CCC food is simple and nutritive, like at Boy Scout camps. Hot dogs and beans are favorite dishes. Michael Shuga eats between Henry and Richard.

4. BACK ON THE JOB during afternoon, Fort Hunt boys shovel dirt for park improvement, clear paths, work on soil erosion projects. Henry's costume (at right) is the correct outfit for CCC work on a summer day. Both hats and shirts are optional.

5. AT 4 P. M. THE WORK DAY is over. Henry and Richard start the unloading process when their truck gets back to camp. Enrollees engage in 150 types of work.

6. NEXT JOB IS GETTING CLEANED UP for retreat. John Wallace, James Stone, Richard and Henry decide shaving is in order. They may go into town later. Fort Hunt is one of country's best CCC camps, was inspected by England's King and Queen last June.

7. LINED UP FOR INSPECTION at around 5 p. m., Richard is third from end, Henry fifth. This is the standard CCC uniform. CCC boys get a basic cash allowance of $30 a month for 40 hours of work each week, but $22 goes home to parents.

8. FORT HUNT BOYS HAVE their own pool for late afternoon swimming, are now about ready to duck Lieut. R. B. Carleton, company commander. Fort Hunt was built during Spanish-American War to guard Potomac Bend from Virginia side, was first camp established in this area.

9. UNDER THE ICY outdoor shower, Henry, Richard and Andrew Malenchek clean up some more, engage in the antics usual to boys' camps everywhere.

10. AFTER SUPPER on summer days there's time for lounging informally about the camp grounds. In this scene Henry is near the camp dog. Construction of bridle path from Memorial Bridge to Alexandria and of the wild waterfowl sanctuary at Roaches Run are Fort Hunt projects.

11. READING THE COMIC STRIPS is the recreation engaging attention of Edward Tinesta and Henry. Most boys thrive on the CCC program of useful work, fresh air and recreation, regular meals and health supervision. Rip-rapping banks of the Potomac is another Fort Hunt project.

12. DEEP IN A GAME of Chinese checkers are Edward Tinesta, Leader Clarence Aasen, Matthew Yaksic, George Burwell, Andrew Malenchek, Leader Joseph Goodwald and Henry. As their names indicate, many of the Fort Hunt boys are from the coal mine sections of Pennsylvania.

Health Service Goes Aboard

In addition to conducting health campaigns and leading the way in medical research, the United States Public Health Service is in charge of quarantine work at American ports and is doctor for the Coast Guard.

Pictures on this page were made in Baltimore, where five to eight ships come into port daily and where clipper ships often land. The Baltimore quarantine station has been in operation approximately 80 years, is staffed with a medical officer in charge and two boarding officers.

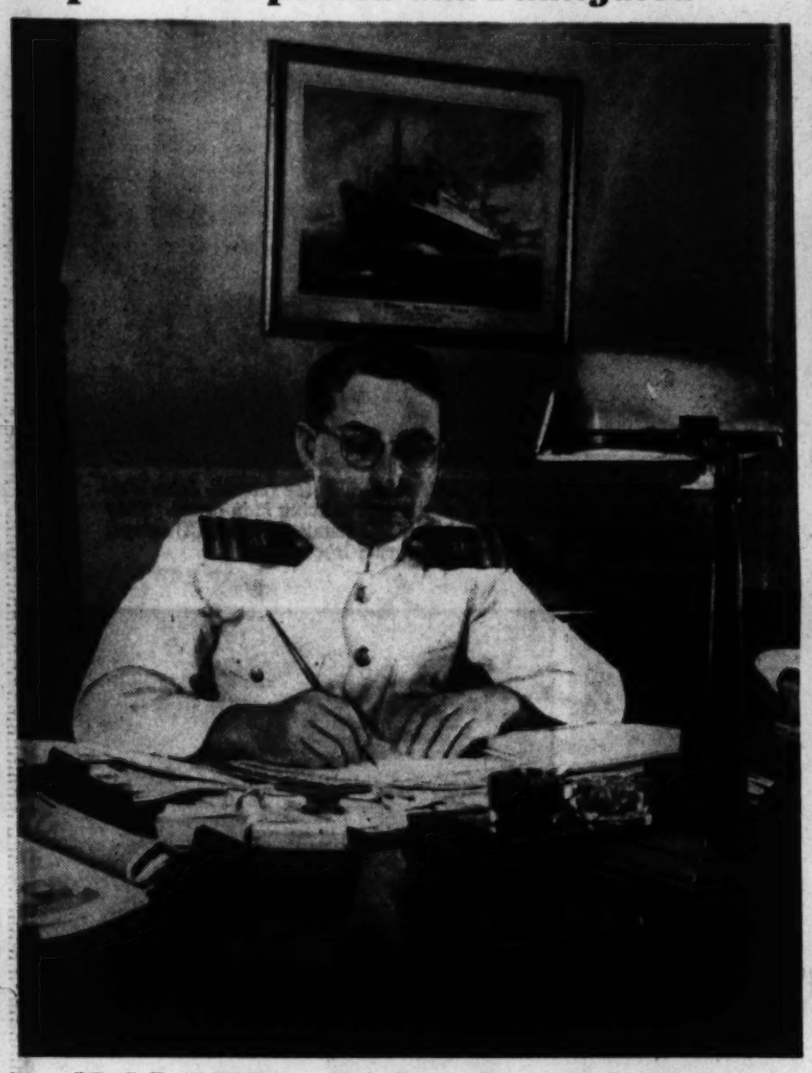
Ships entering the harbor are "blown down" by two long and two short blasts. They respond with the same signal. All have to stop and be examined before docking.

OUT TO SEA in the tugboat T. B. McClintic to inspect banana boat Sagua goes Dr. H. G. Williams, piloted by Arthur L. Weaver, of U. S. P. H. S.

DR. WILLIAMS climbs aboard the Sagua, which is up from Honduras, examines crew for venereal and other diseases, inspects ship's papers for voyage illnesses.

TO A MAN, the crew must come by to see Dr. Williams, who gets to know many of them by name. When diseases or plagues have been reported at ports from which the boats sailed the examination is particularly thorough. The preventive work done affects the welfare of all Americans.

Ships are Inspected and Fumigated



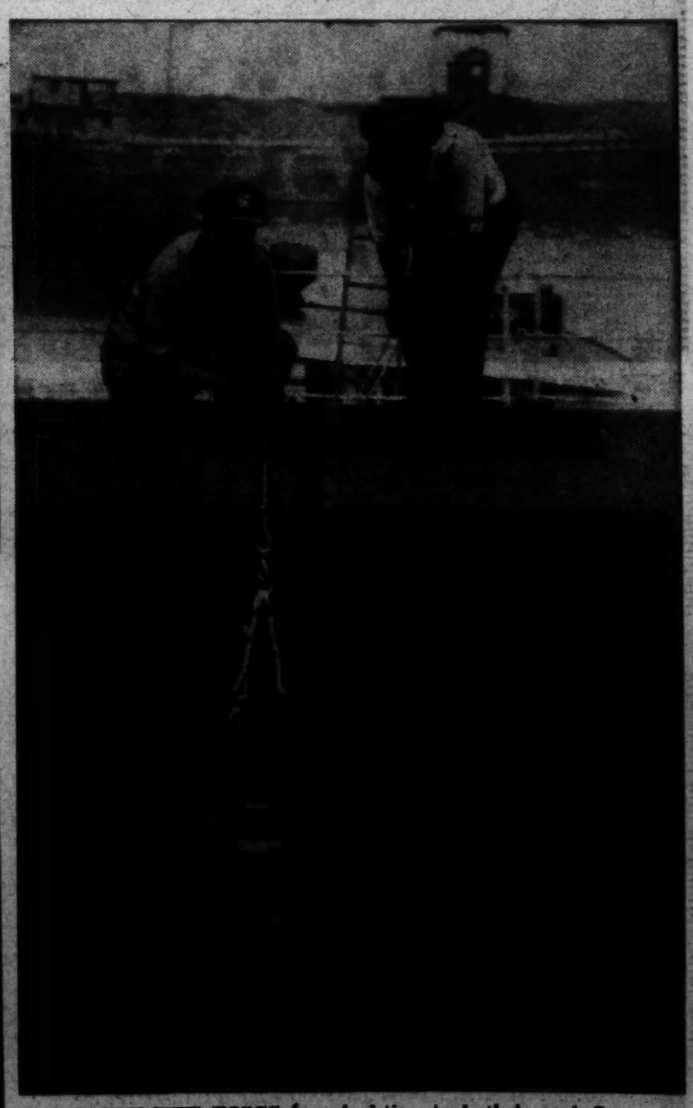
DR. C. B. SPENCER, medical officer in charge of Baltimore quarantine station, signs bills to be sent agents of ships inspected by his boarding officers. If there are many rats to be cleaned out the bills are larger. "Deratization" is important part of quarantine work.

PURSER JAMES M. HANNAWAY, of the Sagua, brings his papers to Dr. Williams for checking. If there has been any illness during the trip up it must be reported—and Dr. Williams must examine the patient. Inspector John V. Carney, of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, also inspects the papers.

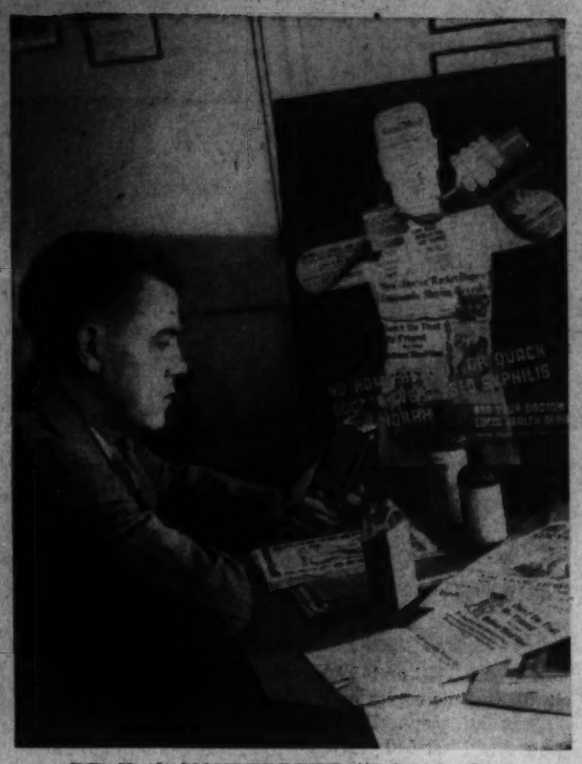
SATISFIED Sagua and crew are free from contagious disease, Dr. Williams climbs down to waiting tug.

PAUL R. CAWTHORN, of U. S. P. H. S., examines deck of Norwegian ore ship Olaf Bergh for evidence of rats. Assistant Arthur L. Weaver comes down the ladder. Crew members of Olaf Bergh, last ship to leave Narvik before German invasion, watch proceedings.

NOT A MAN FROM MARS, but Arthur Weaver equipped with mask and gloves to begin deratization. Tear gas is thrown into ship's hold first—to eliminate any possible stowaways. Then the cardboard discs soaked in deadlier gases are thrown into hold. Below, Cawthorn and Weaver open the cartons of discs and get ready to throw.



WHEN THE DISCS have had time to do their work Cawthorn and Weaver lower a blower to clear lethal gas from the hold. To clear a ship of a bad case of rats is a day's job and means a monetary loss to ship owners. Most ships have learned to keep rats to a minimum.



DR. R. A. VONDERLEHR, Assistant Surgeon General in charge of syphilis, studies quack "cures" and remedies which his division has to combat.

U. S. Crusades Against Syphilis

When the history of life in the United States during the 1930's is finally written, several pages can be devoted to sensational strides made during the decade against syphilis—the disease our parents never discussed, even with their doctors, and nice 1920 newspapers never mentioned.

Thanks to educational campaigns led by the United States Public Health Service, syphilis today is beginning a retreat. The fight against it is far from won, but it is Nation-wide and in the open.

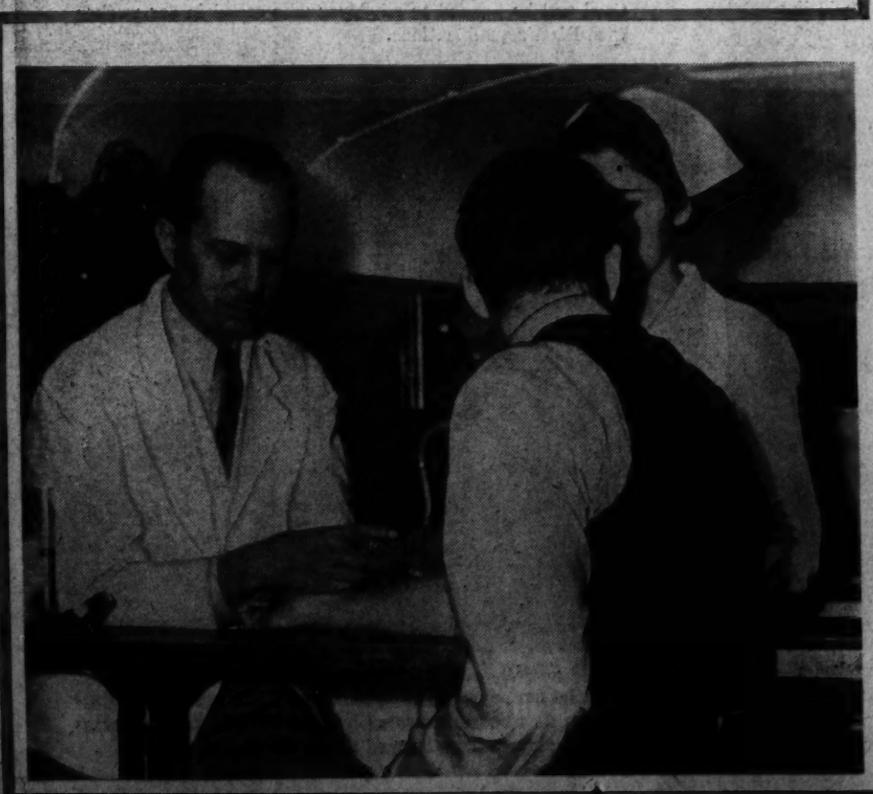
U. S. P. H. S. statistics show approximately 8,000 citizens out of any 100,000 have or have had syphilis.

Surest way to learn whether a person has syphilis is to draw blood from a vein, as at right, and give it the Wasserman test.

SWAMPED WITH MAIL from various States asking aid in syphilis campaign, U. S. P. H. S. sends advice and doctors, sometimes a trailer equipped with treatment and testing facilities. Eleanor N. Walker, secretary to Dr. Vonderlehr, opens the latest batch of letters.

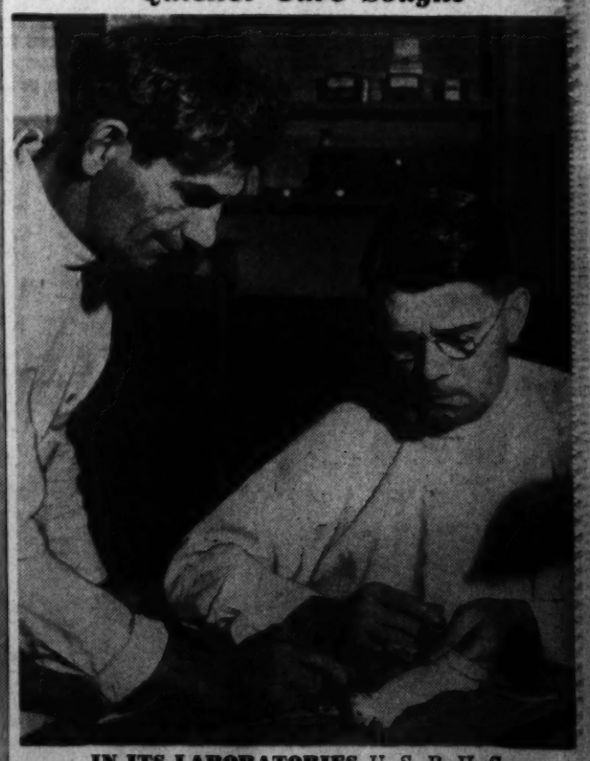
THIS EDUCATIONAL MASS MEETING at which free blood tests were taken in Peoria, Ill., is typical of what has been going on in cities throughout the country during the past few years. Workmen, society leaders, school children, practically everybody in town volunteered to take the Wasserman tests. Not until the tests are universal can the disease be stamped out entirely.

CONFERRING ON DOCTORS to be sent to city or State to help set up a campaign against syphilis are Dr. N. B. Hon, Dr. A. J. Aselmeyer and Dr. Vonderlehr. Clubs and churches often sponsor the campaigns.



AT LEFT, A PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE PHYSICIAN demonstrates how treatment for syphilis is given in modern bus clinics now reaching remote rural areas in the South. The first shots do not cure, but make the disease noncommunicable. Above, one tube contains a dark, free-from-syphilis blood specimen and the other a cloudy blood specimen which signifies treatment is needed.

Quicker Cure Sought

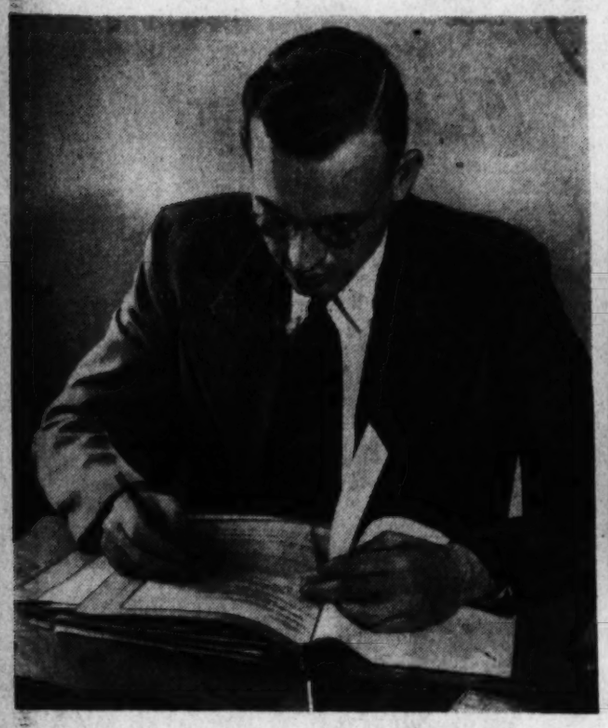


IN ITS LABORATORIES U. S. P. H. S. works on a quick cure for syphilis. Laboratory Assistant L. J. Bender and Associate Pharmacologist T. F. Probey inject a white rat with experimental fluid. The cheapest thing to do with syphilis, the public is beginning to realize, is to cure it.

1. MORE THAN 49,000,000 AMERICANS now have social security numbers. Gordon L. Aldrich comes by Social Security Board headquarters and talks to Receptionist Frances Fainberg about getting one for himself, knows it would be good security.

2. GEORGE B. GATLING, of Orlando, Fla., consults with Field Assistant Howard H. Sheppe regarding his old age insurance. Social Security Board is now making 63,000 payments each month to retired workers and "survivors of workers."

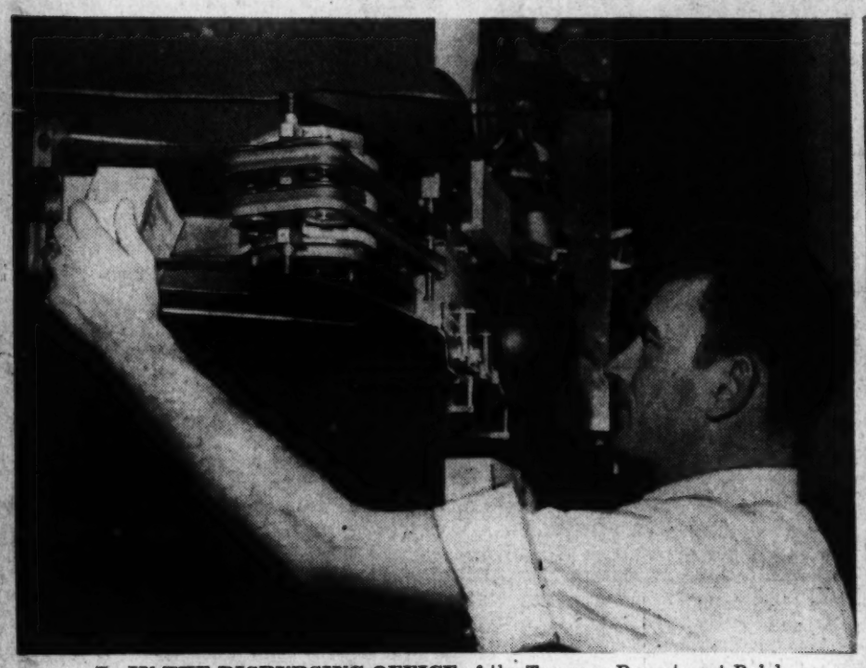
3. MADELENE L. ADAMS and Victor Sadd, manager of the field office, check photostatic copies of Washington social security accounts now kept in Baltimore. Permanent accounts for workers are kept on films and will last 500 years.



4. ADJUDICATOR Robert Peck checks an account. Keeping track of Social Security accounts is one of biggest bookkeeping and money-checking jobs of all times.

5. JULIETTE KLIEGEL, of Social Security, prepares a schedule of payments for Treasury's disbursing office. Two of three security programs are jointly administered with the States.

6. MARTHA KENNEDY, BARBARA STRICKLAND, Anne Havelka and Velda Crawford operate machines that help make up the payment schedules. Social Security Act was passed in 1935 to provide Federal old-age insurance and Federal-State cooperation in unemployment compensation, public assistance, public health and welfare. In 1939, amendments brought "survivors" under old-age insurance.



7. IN THE DISBURSING OFFICE of the Treasury Department Ralph K. Baughman operates the machine that prepares Social Security checks for distribution. Like other Federal Security Agency division, the Social Security Board provides protection against risks often "beyond individual control."

Employment Service at Work

AT DISTRICT EMPLOYMENT SERVICE, Hildegard Rothenback registers as unemployed with Mary L. Buffett, who hands her an application blank on which she will list her qualifications and preferences for jobs.

RALPH L. RIZER, JR., who registered at service several weeks ago, is given referring card by James P. Haltigan. Card will be handed to employer who called in for worker with Rizer's qualifications.

8. ONE OF 2,000,000 American employers, William W. Spellman runs two sports centers. He confers with Secretary Edith Friedman about Social Security report he has to make out quarterly. Spellman doesn't mind the job of keeping up with what is taken from employe checks and given to Treasury—but his bookkeeper still "grumbles a bit."

OSCAR G. JONES, Employment Service official, makes a call on Burnett Trueworthy, assistant manager at Kresge's, interests him in calling Service when he has vacancy or needs extra workers.

GOOD COOKS, stenographers, salesmen, maids and receptionists are among the unemployed Washingtonians with cards in files being inspected by Mrs. M. Winifred Biondi. Many employers have learned to use the Service.
